UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

LATIN AMERICAN COURSE LIST

SPRING (2134)
Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences foreign culture or non-Western culture requirement or other general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts, conferences, and the annual Latin American and Caribbean Festival. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas or call 412-648-7392 for a printed copy.

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only pre-requisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in Upper and Lower Case are international courses in which a significant amount of the content is Latin American. For these courses to count towards the certificate, work must be focused on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master's level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s major. The primary academic department of the faculty member teaching the course determines how the course will be counted. Examples: A course taught by Prof. Barry Ames that is cross-listed in Political Science and GSPIA will be counted as a course in Political Science (the primary academic department of Prof. Ames) no matter if the student registers for the course under GSPIA or PS. A course taught by Prof. John Beverley that is cross-listed in Spanish, English Literature, and Cultural Studies will be counted as a course in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (the primary academic department of Prof. Beverley).

Faculty: Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone x8-7396) if your course contains a significant amount of Latin American content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
SCHEDULE OF LATIN AMERICAN AREA STUDIES COURSES
SPRING TERM (JANUARY 1 TO APRIL 27, 2013)

All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document.

Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website:
www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

SCHOOL AND FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE--ARTSC
Study abroad programs are offered in many countries of the Caribbean, Mesoamerica, Central and South America. Students should contact the Study Abroad Office, 802 William Pitt Union, to arrange study programs of 3 to 18 credits. See the CLAS Academic Advisor to verify how credits will count towards completion of the certificate or related concentration in Latin American Studies.

11:00 AM-12:15 PM  recitation.  HIST 0521  Limit 30  4165 Posvar Hall

This course will examine the historical roots of contemporary Caribbean society. Major historical developments from the period of the subjugation of the indigenous populations through the era of slavery and the plantation system to the rise of modern nationalism and the impact of U.S. intervention will be examined, as will related socio-economic systems and institutions. The pan-regional approach which recognizes shared identity and experiences not only within the Caribbean but also with Africa and the American south will be preferred, although illustrative studies of some individual countries will be undertaken.
Prerequisite(s): none
This course is offered at least once a year.

This course is a comparative study of the complex roles of women of African descent in cross-cultural perspective. The societies in which these roles will be examined include western and southern Africa, the United States, Brazil, and the Caribbean including Cuba. Among the topics to be explored are women's participation and/or lack of participation in these societies within and outside the domestic domain, issues surrounding gender relation, the impact of urbanization and industrialization on their roles, religious and political participation, health issues, class status, and Diasporan women as cultural workers.

Despite their geographical and cultural differences, writers from the Caribbean, Africa and the United States have undergone similar experiences of oppression, problems of self-identity, and the quest for self-respect. These similarities will be discussed in class based upon the chosen texts. Thus, the prose, essays, poems, and autobiographies of these three groups of Black writers will be compared in terms of differences and similarities.

This course will review the prehistory of South America from its earliest peopling to the Spanish Conquest. Emphasis will be placed on tracing the rise of civilization in the Andes. Although the best known of the pre-Colombian polities, the Inka empire was merely the last and largest of a long sequence of states and empires. Comparison of the Inka state with these earlier polities will reveal the unique and enduring traditions of Andean political and social organization.

This course will examine the art and architecture of complex New World civilizations in Mesoamerica (northern Mexico to Honduras) and Andean South America before European conquest. Our main goal will be to understand the relationship of the art to the ideology, cosmology, worldview and culture(s) of its creators. Themes to be explored include the relationship of the art to religion, the organization of power and the interaction between groups. Mesoamerican cultures to be studied include the Olmec, Maya, Teotihuacan, Zapotec, and Aztec. The ancient cultures of Andean South America -- Chavín, Paracas, Nazca, Moche, Wari, Tiwanaku, Chimú and Inca -- will also be examined.

This small lecture class covers Amerindian (or native) political, cultural, and economic resistance (and accommodation) with reference to outsiders. Resistance and accommodation vs. outsiders is also related to conflicts within and among native communities. The temporal focus is long-term, tracking cases from prehispanic times (2500 BC) through current times. Much of the case material concerns the Maya peoples of Central America, with further cases for comparison drawn from other native groups in North and South America. A variety of anthropological theories and research methods are used to make sense of the resistance/accommodation. For modern timespans the emphasis is on ethnography, for the early independence and colonial timespans, ethnohistory predominates, and for the prehispanic timespans the focus is on archaeology and art history/epigraphy. To make sense of the diverse cases of conflict and accommodation, we draw on anthropological thinking about such phenomena as violent peasant rebellions, everyday resistance, ethnic nationalism, cultural essentialism, invented traditions, testimonial history, cultural renaissance (or revitalization) movements, gender and authenticity, religious conversion (& syncretism), ethnic tradition as imposed trap or chosen defense mechanism, uses of material culture for communication, and literacy.

This course examines the rise and fall of several ancient civilizations. It covers the archaeology and earliest history of regions recognized as significant independent centers for the development of early civilization: Mesopotamia, Egypt, Indus Valley, China, Southeast Asia, Mesoamerica, and Andean South America. Central themes concern: why and how civilizations first emerge and then collapse; relationships among economic, political, social, and ideological factors in early civilizations; generic versus unique qualities of different early civilizations.

1737 Special Topics in Cultural Anthropology: Politics of Gender and Food

Food is sustenance and absolutely essential to life. But food is never simply about nutrition. Because it is fundamental to the human experience, food is also a medium for the expression of culture and social identity. Moreover, food relays complex social messages about gender, sexuality, and family. Consequently, food is also a means of expressing the social and symbolic use of power and control in which social inequalities are expressed in culinary forms. This course will examine regional food cultures (such as the United States, China, Japan, Italy, Cuba, and Greece) as we consider food from the vantage point of gendered systems of production, distribution, and consumption as we consider questions such as: What is "fair trade" coffee; Why is it primarily women who receive chocolates on Valentine's Day; How did sushi "go global" and What do "real" men eat? This seminar examines popular sources, films, and anthropological and feminist studies of food, gender, and power as we explore the intersections of food and foodways, with themes such as sex and childbirth, identity, ritual, and globalization and sustainability.

Prerequisite(s): none

Check with the department on how often this course is offered.

UHC-designated courses: Students below a 3.25 GPA must go to the Honors College for permission.

1748 CULTURES OF SOUTH AMERICA

Undergraduate Seminar. A general survey of Indians of South America from the Spanish conquest to the present. Emphasizing the social, religious and economic position within the Pluriethnic society of which they are part. There will be an essay midterm and a final.

Prerequisite(s): none

Check with the department on how often this course is offered.

1752 Anthropology of Food

This course will examine the social ecology of human nutrition. It will apply the concepts and principles of anthropology to the study of human diet and nutrition. Discussions will focus on the origins of the human diet; human dietary adaptation to diverse ecological and technological situations; behavioral and ecological factors that influence diet in technologically simple, modernizing and contemporary societies; and social/cultural meanings and implications of food behaviors. Prerequisites: Intro to Cultural Anthropology 0780

Undergraduate Seminar. This course centers its attention on the complex interplay between demographic processes and outcomes (such as fertility and population growth, population decline and mortality, and migration) on the one hand, and social/cultural evolution and social/cultural forms studied by cultural anthropologists and archaeologists. We will critically review major concepts and theories in demography and demographic anthropology. This course takes the subject matter of population dynamics as the framework for examining important anthropological themes, debates and theories in the context of different societies and cultures. This is an honors college level course that requires a great deal of critical reading and writing. THIS COURSE IS NOT OPEN TO GRADUATE STUDENTS.

Latin America’s history of economic development is unique, puzzling and interesting. This course uses data together with concepts and theories from the field of economic growth and development in order to understand the distinct features of economic performance in Latin American countries. Commonalities and differences among Latin American countries are analyzed.

Topics covered include Latin American economic history, growth accounting, import substitution industrialization, trade policy, exchange rate policy and the current account, monetary and fiscal policy, macroeconomic stability, rural development, poverty and inequality, demographic change, health policy, economic growth and the environment, and Latin America in the global economy.

        11:00 AM-12:15 PM  Limit 22
        135 CL

This course studies literary and film texts from the US, Europe, and Latin America. Students explore different approaches including, for example, cultural/historical, biographical, psychological, and feminist. The course seeks to develop an understanding of literary/film texts and influential ways of reading. We will examine the ways in which gender and sexuality shape the interpretations of world literature and film.

Prerequisite(s): PREQ: ENGCMP 0200 or (ENGCTMP 0203 or 0205 or 0207 or 0208 or 0250 or FP 0003 or 0006 or ENGCMP 0004 or 0006 or 0020 or ENG 0102) or (ENGR 0012 or 0712 or 0715 or 0718)

11137  Mo We Fr  No recitation. Enroll  Rogers, Gayle
        10:00 AM-10:50 AM  Limit 35
        204 CL

This course explores the transnational connections between different literatures, regions, and languages of the Americas, which came to be understood collectively with the 15th century European voyages as the "New World." We will study and compare a range of literary and non-fiction texts that explore issues of power and identity in colonial times, and their effects in the postcolonial period. We will raise such questions as: How does literature play a role in constructing people’s visions of the world? What constitutes a national and/or continental literary tradition? How does contact with unfamiliar people and places affect literary genre and form? Readings will be understood in conversation with one another, and will include works from Latin America, the Caribbean, the U.S., and the “Old World.”

This course introduces students to translation studies, important for an understanding of world literature. The focus is on English versions of literary and film texts in other languages. Students will consider the ways in which talented translators render influential literature and film. We grapple with the following questions: How do multiple English translations of the same text differ and what is the result? How does one evaluate a translation? No pre-requisite in foreign languages required.

        recitation.  Limit 35

Students will read literature, speeches, and essays by winners of the Nobel and other global literary prizes such as the Booker and the Commonwealth; they will also study theoretical discussions of the generation and distribution of prestige conferred by prizes. These readings will provide the framework for discussion of a series of questions about the creation and appropriation of cultural capital, the ideological authority of prize committees, and so on. The power to grant recognition carries with it an implicit authority to set an agenda, assumed by groups in industrialized “First-World” countries. How do metropolitan taste and recognition affect dominant and emergent literatures and nations? How do particular contexts and award-winning texts exert pressure on existing criteria and values? How do powerful writers such as García Márquez, J.M. Coetzee, and Rushdie re-inscribe the relations between innovative literary forms and historical imbalances of cultural authority and power? How does the category “Prized Books” also implicitly constitute and comment upon a body of literature that is “unprized”? How do prized books redefine notions of readership and citizenship in the world of globalization and electronic access? Such questions will open up the idea of “world literature” not as an afterthought to the canon of “English” literature, but as an integral and definitive part of it.

The goal of this course is to help students gain a thorough understanding of the issues raised by races and racism. Such understanding can only be gained by bringing together several disciplines in an interdisciplinary manner. Thus, we will examine issues about race and racism that arise from biology, history, philosophy, and psychology. In particular, we will examine the following questions: Does genetics show that races are real? Why are racial categories used in medicine? Where does the concept of race come from? Is it a recent historical invention? How has it influenced the sciences? What are races? What is racism? Should we be color-blind? How does race contribute to one’s identity? Why do we think about races? Are there differences in intelligence between races? What are racial prejudices? The course will involve reading original articles and book extracts from a range of disciplines, including history, philosophy, and several sciences. These articles will be explained and discussed in class.

With all the recent debates over the place of Latinos in the United States, it is easy to forget that Latinos have been, in fact, an integral part of this nation for centuries. In this exploration of the history, culture, and economy of North America and the United States from the sixteenth century to World War II, this class will attempt to answer the following question: how would our understanding of U.S. history change if we began with St Augustine instead of Jamestown? We will pay particular attention to questions of race and gender and to U.S. foreign relations with Mexico and the Caribbean. In addition to secondary works, this class uses a variety of primary sources including travel accounts, novels, ballads, sports, and artworks.

This course seeks to provide students with the opportunity to pursue and ponder some of the substance behind the increasingly common rhetoric of globalization, global history, world history, international history, and the like. What do those terms mean? How can students find a foundation upon which to build a confident understanding of these concepts? This course uses cities to explore the common and dissimilar features of human history over millennia, from ancient cultures to today. Cities consist of only five types of spaces—sacred, sovereign, commercial (or economic), residential, and public—that correspond to basic social and human needs. What changes over time, between cultures, and from city to city within a culture is the relative value assigned to each space. The course uses these five spaces to help students to appreciate how cities are assembled to reflect the relative historical and cultural importance of each space. Examining how different cultures in different times design and use such spaces provides students with the conceptual and analytical skills necessary to establishing a basis for appreciating globalization. This course also explores the importance of culture (broadly defined) in a historical context as a factor that gives distinctive shapes to common urban spaces. The design and structure of cities change over time and those changes reflect changing cultural, political, social, and economic values. We will examine one way of appreciating the importance of culture by looking at cases of colonial and cultural conquest. Allowing students to examine such changes enables them to appreciate the ways in which urban design reflects a society’s culture and history. Finally, this course explores the impact of economic and technological changes on urban design and urban life, with a particular focus on the impact of industrialization. This impact has also been global and, in fact, has had the single most powerful impact in the increasing homogenization of urban life. By providing students with the analytical tools and skills to appreciate the importance of these issues, this course enhances students’ critical skills, and their awareness of the common and culturally distinct aspect of human social organization. It also exposes them to a wider world (in the hope that they will explore it). Prerequisites: Although there are no formal prerequisites for this course, students are encouraged to have taken one or more courses on the history of Europe, Russia/Soviet Union, Latin America, or Asia, or a course in international urbanism. Given that the course moves routinely across time and space, having some foundation for understanding historical change or aspects of urban development is helpful. Prerequisite(s): none

This course examines the history of the Roman Catholic Church since 1492 in the Americas using various moments of internal crisis or external conflict as focal points for study. Topics include: missionary and military contact with New World indigenous populations after 1492, the minority situation of Catholics in the new United States, the Irish Famine and its consequences, conflicts between Catholic ethnics, the impact of Catholic support for fascist regimes in the 1930s and 1940s, counter-cultural forms of Catholicism (conscientious objectors, civil rights activists, pacifists), Vatican II and its impact, liberation theology, Marxism and structural reform in Latin America, shifting theological positions on social and moral issues, and the current sexual abuse crisis. While the emphasis rests upon the social, economic and political dimensions of Catholic history, the course also addresses the aesthetic and cultural legacy of Catholicism including sacred architecture, music, and the arts, in elite and vernacular forms. This is an exploration of the ancient and global history of piracy. Using primary historical documents (written by and about pirates) as well as the accounts of modern historians, we will discuss a range of topics such as the role of piracy in the building of empires, the later struggle of merchants and their allies to eradicate piracy through bloody campaigns of capital punishment and the meanings of the pirate as represented in popular culture through the ages.

This course surveys the history of sport, focusing primarily on the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Its emphasis is on the changing nature and meaning of sport. It tackles several questions, including why and how sport evolved from a community pastime to today's corporate money ball, what sport has meant to people in different societies and epochs, and what roles race, gender, and the media have played in sport. We will look at sport in settings that range from baseball in the Caribbean to basketball among the Crow on the reservations of Montana, as well as focus on the role of sport in Pittsburgh.

This course introduces students to the study of the Portuguese overseas empire in the early modern period by adopting a nonconventional perspective. In addition to offering a chronological and geographical framework of Portuguese expansion, the course will focus on the political, social and cultural interactions that emerged from the permanent contact of Europeans with non-European societies in Africa, Asia and the Americas. The course considers Portuguese overseas expansion within the broader context of the early modern world and investigates notions of globalization.

Popular religions emerge from the struggle of a group, tribe, or nation to maintain unity against socioeconomic change, such as the effects of colonization, industrialization, and competitive capitalism. This course examines some popular religions that have formed in North America since the 18th century among various populations: Native Americans, Afro-Caribbeans, Roman Catholics, and Protestant Pentecostals. Topics include peyote cults, Santería, voodoo, saint's cults, miracles, pilgrimages, speaking in tongues, and snake handling. The course method is interdisciplinary, drawing upon anthropology, documentary film, history, religious studies, psychology, and sociology.

This course will examine the art and architecture of complex New World civilizations in Mesoamerica (northern Mexico to Honduras) and Andean South America before European conquest. Our main goal will be to understand the relationship of the art to the ideology, cosmology, worldview and culture(s) of its creators. Themes to be explored include the relationship of the art to religion, the organization of power and the interaction between groups. Mesoamerican cultures to be studied include the Olmec, Maya, Teotihuacan, Zapotec, and Aztec. The ancient cultures of Andean South America -- Chavín, Paracas, Nazca, Moche, Wari, Tiwanaku, Chimú and Inca -- will also be examined.

The “vast hosts of the dead” (Joyce) surround us and guide us in life, no matter what our own beliefs about ancestors and afterlife happen to be. What people make of death and the dead organizes their lives in the present – and vice versa. The dead are central not only to the spheres of ritual and religion, but to those of politics, history, and collective memory as well. “The tradition of all the dead generations weighs like a nightmare on the brain of the living,” Marx wrote memorably. But the same interdependence can be seen more positively and productively: in the words of historian Vincent Brown, “death and life are not only opposites but also mutually constitutive states of being made meaningful by the practices that define them.” This seminar will explore a range of issues connected with these mutually constituted states of life and death, mortality and immortality. In the process we will engage explicitly with the department’s new constellations. While we could talk about all of them, we will focus on identity, agency, and mobility. Specific topics will range widely, from slavery to war to commemoration to portraiture, but our emphasis will be less on content than on method and approach. For that reason paper topics are also flexible. To the maximum extent possible I would like students to work on research topics that are close to their own areas of interest. I plan to have the course culminate in a “symposium” in which all the seminar participants present their research publicly in pithy, interesting talks. Focusing on a variety of musical traditions throughout the world, this course addresses factors that have influenced historical and contemporary musical performance practices. Special attention is placed on how political, economic, social, and religious factors influence musical aesthetics and notions of identity among performers and audiences. Positioning music within a broader context of postcolonial, technological, and transnational development, this course analyzes the ever-changing relationship between traditional and modern socio-musical approaches toward performance techniques, musical transmission, and intercultural exchange.

This seminar is designed to explore the ways in which the concept of culture has emerged as a focal point for interdisciplinary scholarship in ethnomusicology in both the humanities and the social sciences. We will explore the ways in which contemporary scholars study culture as social practice, the social relations of knowledge, and the roles of symbolic, subjective, and expressive practices in constituting as well as reflecting social relations. At the same time, we will examine the ways in which contemporary scholars connect cultural texts to social and historical contexts, trace the origins and evolution of cultural practices as social forces, and relate the aesthetic properties and the uses and effects of culture to social structures. Finally, we will address global displacements of social relations in the present era to examine how they affect the past, present, and future of ethnomusicological scholarship. Cultural Theory and Music I is part of a two-semester sequence. Cultural Theory and Music II will be offered in Fall 2013.

This course explores the political economy of Latin America from the perspectives of economics and political science, and offers a comparative framework to discuss the relationship between quality of democracy and economic governance in the region. The main assumption of this course is that we cannot understand politics and economics in isolation from one another. Consequently, the understanding of the realities of the political and economic life in Latin America requires us to analyze the interaction between economic and political actors in the region. From a historical perspective, we will examine the main political events in the region, the institutional evolution of the region, and the evolution of the Latin American economy. We will also examine in detail the regional strategies for economic development over the past two centuries (export-led strategies, import substituting industrialization, neoliberalism, and the resurgent leftist nationalism) and focus on the extent that these strategies have influenced politics and policymaking. In the first part of the semester, we will discuss the Latin American experience in building democratic political institutions and national markets. In the second part, we will focus on the analysis of how political institutions and markets have affected the quality and scope of the economic policymaking processes and outcomes. We will rely on the use the analytical tools provided by political economy and history to illuminate the political history of Latin America. (Comparative Field)

In the late eighteenth century, the word Ademocrat began to be widely used to refer to those who sought to create new ways for human societies to govern themselves that would break with the divinely-sanctioned monarchies and the entrenched social hierarchies under which most people lived. In several great multi continental waves of change, people refashioned their political institutions, often in bitter conflict with champions of older systems and sometimes in equally bitter conflict against champions of other kinds of change. The latest such wave began in western Europe in the mid-1970s, picked up steam in South America in the 1980s, included the overthrow of Communist regimes in Eastern Europe at the end of that decade, and continues with movements for democratization in Africa in the 1990s. In this course, we want to understand: 1) why it was in particular historical moments that such waves of social transformation took place; 2) the role of particular social movements in democratization; 3) the ways in which the meaning of democracy has been debated since the breakthrough of the late eighteenth century; 4) the role of established elites in democratization, both as reformers and as resisters; and 5) the ways in which democratizing processes in some countries have powerfully effected political processes elsewhere. After a study of the democratizing moments of the past, we will look at the processes, prospects and perils of the current moment.

The goal of this class is to compare and contrast legislatures around the world; we will consider the roles that legislatures play, as well as the institutional and other factors that affect their organization and functioning. The course is organized as a graduate seminar, and thus each session will be built around a critical analysis of academic literature. In our discussion we will work to keep a critical eye on the motivation behind the studies, only then looking at the specific questions and methodologies the different authors use. We will frequently use literature on the U.S. Congress to frame our discussions, simply because that literature is so voluminous and influential. In general, however, we will consider the United States as simply one comparative case.

This course introduces students to the operations of the United Nations and its potential for contributing to a more peaceful, equitable, and sustainable world. We take up the world’s most pressing issues—such as peace and security, nuclear disarmament, poverty, economic and gender inequalities, and environmental degradation—to explore how the world’s governments have attempted to address global problems. Has the UN been an effective place for managing these issues? How might it be improved? What unique roles do civil society groups, or non-governmental organizations (NGOs), play in the pursuit of the United Nations’ mission and goals? To help us consider these questions, we will engage in video conferences with United Nations ambassadors, UN officials, and representatives from civil society groups. Students will have opportunities to ask questions of distinguished guest speakers, who will be joining us from the United Nations headquarters in New York. In addition to gaining an understanding of contemporary global issues, students will learn about the practical, day-to-day operations of this important world body. They will also have a chance to offer their own proposals for improving the ability of the world community to address major problems. Global Studies students can take this course in place of Introduction to Global Studies.

Everything is cultural and culture is everywhere! Yet, culture is an ambiguous concept, difficult to be grasped in a single definition. Our societies are the product of culture, while our cultures are made by societies. In this course, we will examine various theoretical approaches to culture (classic and contemporary) and discern the complex relations between culture and the individual, and between culture and the society. We will have a global approach since we will observe and compare the ways in which different cultural practices shape people’s life around the world. We will also pay particular attention to the visual aspect of culture and its subliminal messages. Gender, poverty, inequality, and national identity are some of the major topics we will analyze through visual lens.

The main goal of this course is to introduce students to the cultural history of the Latin American world. Taking a multidisciplinary and critical approach, we will study crucial moments and social processes in Latin American history to reach a better understanding of this heterogeneous geopolitical configuration in the present. We will start with the pre-contact period. Then we will study the controversial conquest and colonization processes. Afterwards we will focus on the different national projects and revolutions that have caused significant transformations in Latin America. We will stress the importance of the implications of these cultural, social and political dynamics in order not only to understand the past but also to examine current events. Finally we will review some contemporary social problems and challenges. In this manner, we will learn about how the Latin America has been thought of the past, and trace differences and continuities of these ways of thinking as well. Toward this end, we will work with a broad variety of materials including as chronicles, essays, scholarly writings, short stories, poems, and films. This course will be conducted in Spanish."

How is love expressed when it is confronted with race and class differences within zones in constant internal war? How are definitions of justice and truth redefined within jurisdictions of illegality and prejudice? These are some of the questions we will encounter as we take a look at several contemporary authors and films from Cuba, Haiti, Dominican Republic, Puerto Rico and other islands of the Caribbean. Working on some theorist on justice (Rancière and Nussbaum), we will be able to better understand the conflicts between love and justice in several Caribbean contemporary authors and their search for love. The course will be in Spanish with several readings in English.

Spanish 1600. Survey of Spanish Literature. This course is aimed at developing a ability in Spanish speaking, reading and writing, by involving students in a range of texts drawn from classical and modern Spanish literature. We will begin with the poem “Romance de la Guardia Civil” by Spain’s best-known modern poet, Federico García Lorca, which will take us into the question of the Spanish Civil war and the cultural contradictions of Spanish modernity. Then we will go back in time to look at Spanish medieval ballads (romances) and epics. We will segue to the present to consider the Mexican song form called the narcocorrido, a descendant of the medieval romance, and read a novel by the Spanish writer Arturo Pérez-Reverte, La Reina del Sur, on the world of narcotraffic in Spain and Mexico. We will then look at a very abridged version of Don Quijote to give you some idea of Spain’s most enduring literary work. Finally, we will look at a film and / or literary text that represent contemporary Spain. The course is taught in Spanish. Requirements: essay type in class mid-term and final exams, written partly in Spanish, partly in English. The class will meet twice a week so regular attendance is expected. Estimated class size: 15-18.

Prerequisite(s): SPAN 0055. This course is offered every fall and spring.

28904  Mo We  No  Enroll  Garcia, 4:30 PM-5:45 PM  recitation.  Limit 25  Armando 230 Victoria Hall

"Rodolfo Usigli once claimed that the Americas were more legitimately tragic and modern than were playwrights like William Shakespeare and Jean Racine. To address this link between tragedy and modernity proposed by the Mexican playwright, this course examines the turn towards tragedy by 20th-century theatre, performance, literature and cultural theorists of coloniality. We will anchor our discussion of tragic aesthetics both in the experiences of Western Antiquity and in the experiences of colonialism and modernity, to begin to trace the relationship between the tragic ethos of the Ancient World and the tragic subjects of our present time. Our readings will draw from work by Greek tragedians (Sophocles, Euripides and Aeschylus) and the adaptations of Antiquity by U.S. Latina/o (Cherríe Moraga, Luis Alfaro, Caridad Svich), Latin American (José Watanabe, Grupo Cultural Yuyachakani, Griselda Gambaro) and Caribbean writers (Luis Rafael Sánchez) of the contemporary world. The course will be conducted in Spanish."

The upper level undergraduate course is a Senior Capstone Seminar for Spanish majors and represents the culmination of their undergraduate learning in the field of Spanish and Latin American literatures and cultures. The seminar is also intended to serve as a bridge between undergraduate and postgraduate study or professional research. Students will have the opportunity to systematize the knowledge of their major field by producing a research paper that demonstrates competency in the literary analysis as well as evidence of critical thinking when dealing with complex cultural issues. Readings will include fundamental texts of the Latin American literary and cultural tradition and provoking books and essays that suggest new directions for the future of Latin American cultures.

In this seminar, we will examine labor as praxis in theatre and performance studies. That is, in what ways does/can labor function as a theoretical discourse, a historiographical lens and a material practice in theatre and performance studies? How does labor intersect with race, sexuality and gender in theatre and performance histories and theories? What is the relationship between labor as praxis and U.S. theatre and performance across domestic, hemispheric and global positionings? A given of this seminar is “theatre is theory is theatre is theory.” To that end, what challenges and opportunities does such thinking about/with/through labor offer not only for the theatre and performance scholar but also the theatre practitioner? Our home base will be the years 1929—1941. We will compare and contrast established scholarly sources alongside new research within the same period; identify historiographical problems of labor and theatre in “the thirties” and beyond in terms of both primary and secondary sources; interrogate the material implications of “labor theory;” and posit arguments concerning the stakes of labor based theatre and performance histories, mythologies, nostalgias and futures in the United States. We will, necessarily, also reflect upon labor within the academy as students, teachers, artists and scholars. What kinds of labor do we do? How, when and why is our labor visible, invisible, valued, devalued?

This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an International perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of U.S. Drug Policy, which will be included. Finally, the various government tactics implemented to counter the threats mentioned herein as well as the impact on the private sector will be integrated into lectures throughout the program.

The purpose of this course is to increase awareness of how the delivery and acceptance of health care may be influenced by social, cultural, and environmental factors. It will provide an overview of how these factors influence a person's response to stressors, daily health, and living needs. The goal is to help students increase their understanding of culturally-congruent care by utilizing cultural concepts, theories, and research. Students will analyze factors that facilitate/hinder communication about health needs, acceptance of the health care regimen, and access to health care systems.

3207 Education Sector Analysis
22533 Th
04:30 PM-07:10 PM
4322 Posvar Hall
Weidman, John

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to analytical tools and examples of comprehensive research on the education sector. Sector analysis plays an essential role in educational policy making, in helping governments and international organizations to judge the progress of education development in a country, in identifying bottlenecks, and in choosing among alternative policies and investment strategies. The context of education for developing countries is changing rapidly due to globalization pressures, constrained budgets, persistent poverty and the need to improve the quality of education outcomes in a competitive world. In this fast-changing economic, social, cultural and political environment, analytical education sector research is essential for the development of sound educational policies.

Specific education sector work will be discussed and analyzed by students with the contribution and occasional participation of professors and specialists of the field invited as guest speakers. Students are encouraged to choose countries for their own sector analysis from any region of the world in which they are interested. However, students seeking credit for UCIS Area Studies Programs must choose a country in the particular program’s geographical area. Examples of project identification, design, and project evaluations in which the instructor has been involved will also be examined and discussed. NOTE: Students taking this course for the Latin American certificate must concentrate their work on Latin America.

3343 Comparative Education
22361 Th
7:15 PM-9:55 PM
4301 Posvar Hall
Jacob, James

This seminar focuses on contemporary problems in postsecondary education throughout the world. The seminar will begin with a brief historical introduction, followed by a review of case studies and other documents on higher education in the United States and other countries. Special attention will be given to an examination of comparative and contrasting policies and issues in higher education as they unfold in various regions (Latin America & the Caribbean, Asia, Africa, Middle Eastern, Europe) and in the United States. Students enrolled in the certificate in Latin American studies will be required to work on a final project analyzing higher education in two or more Latin American & Caribbean countries or the region as a whole.

LAW, SCHOOL OF

The following Law courses will be accepted for the certificates in Latin American Studies when the student applies his/her work in the course to Latin America. Note that these courses are generally restricted to students enrolled in the School of Law. For further information, read the descriptions.

Gonzales-Rivas, Marcela

Capstone seminars are rigorous, rich, learning experiences, focused on solving a problem posed by a “client,” which for this course is generally a nonprofit organization or government agency in a developing country. The Capstones give students the opportunity to apply their expertise and skills to address planning or policy problems suggested by the clients. In this Capstone course, students will analyze and evaluate the Sustainable Rural Cities program (SRC), a recent initiative designed and implemented by the government of the Mexican state of Chiapas. This program aims at reducing poverty by generating population density, involving policies of housing, infrastructure and public space, community planning, and the creation of jobs, among others.

PIA 2096 Capstone: Understanding and Preventing Extreme Violence
21391 Tu
6:00 P.M.-9:00 PM
3800 Posvar Hall
Seybolt, Taylor

This course is concerned with the protection of civilians during violent conflict. Despite legal and moral prohibitions against attacking non-combatants, regular and irregular fighting forces commit atrocities with disturbing frequency. We begin with a review of the moral and legal context, from the Genocide Convention to the International Criminal Court. The core of the course analyzes the causes of mass killing and crimes against humanity, with particular attention paid to theories of escalation and strategic interaction and to cases from the early 1900s to the present. After investigating the context and causes, the course evaluates efforts to prevent and respond to mass atrocities. In particular, we will look at early warning, planning and training programs put forward by various governmental and non-governmental bodies in the U.S and at the UN. The primary assignment is a serious research paper.

PIA 2101 Managing Emergencies & Disasters
17401 Mo
6:00 P.M.-9:00 PM
3431 Posvar Hall
Comfort, Louise

"Emergencies and disasters create an extraordinarily difficult set of challenges for public managers. In disaster, public managers are legally responsible for the protection of life, property and continuity of operations in their respective communities. Yet, they are suddenly confronted with situations they may have never seen before. How do they assess the situation? How do they formulate a strategy of action to bring the situation under control? What information do citizens need to protect their own lives and property? How do managers of nonprofit and private organizations make informed decisions under the urgent stress of disaster, when lives and property are at risk? As the world’s population increases, the incidence of disasters, both natural and man-made, also increases as people move into vulnerable coastal regions and amass in megacities.
This course will examine the conditions that confront public, private, and nonprofit managers in communities exposed to risk from natural, technological, and deliberate disasters. It will review the current organizational plans for assessing risk, and examine the requirements for enabling communities to reduce their exposure to risk. This course meets a requirement for the school-wide minor in Civil Security and Disaster Management.

This course examines multilateral diplomacy and international cooperation, paying special attention to the role that institutions play in shaping the modern world. Students learn practical skills relevant to a career in a multilateral setting, as well as information about the history of major institutions and some important political science theories on the nature of cooperation. The class is divided into three parts: Part 1 examines the role institutions play in international politics and covers the various theoretical debates surrounding their efficacy. Part 2 covers the history, structure, and function of major international organizations like the United Nations, NATO, the European Union, African Union, Organization of American States, and others. Part 3 examines some managerial techniques important to working in a multilateral setting, and is designed to give students concrete skills that will be important in a career in multilateral diplomacy. Grading is based on two essays, a policy memo, and a presentation. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

What are the distributive consequence of globalization? In turn, how does redistribution affect global market expansion? Can markets coexist with strong social policies? What are the types of redistribution strategies that governments can or should pursue concomitant with economic liberalization, and why? This course explores these questions by analyzing the impacts of globalization upon the welfare of people in both developed and developing countries, but with particular emphasis on the latter. The extent of government responsibility to protect and promote the welfare of citizens under conditions of globalization has been at the center of international political economy and comparative politics debates in the last three decades. This course will examine the impact of such changes in the context of labor, education and health, and social security policy. We will study existing models, explore recent challenges and predict sustainable approaches for the future. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

The 1992 Rio declaration on environment and development states that “to achieve sustainable development, environmental protection shall constitute an integral part of the development process.” We discuss the linkages between development and the environment, and the role of women, indigenous peoples, and the poor in achieving equitable development and environmental protection. Using tools from economics and policy analysis, we explore the conceptualization of environmental problems (market or government failure); various policy instruments to rectify environmental problems (regulations, voluntary programs, taxes, tradable permits, payments for environmental services and international treaties such as the Basel Convention, the Montreal protocol, and the Kyoto protocol), and the link between trade and the environment. Students case presentations illustrate the challenges of environmental management in developing countries and the roles of civil society, NGOs, corporations, and international institutions such as the World Bank, world trade organization, and United Nations environmental program. Over the course of the semester, students are responsible for several policy memos and powerpoint presentations. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

PIA 2508 NGO Advocacy in World Politics
27740 Mo
12 P.M.-3:00 P.M.
TBA
Alfredson, Lisa

Description: NGOs are increasingly respected and visible as political actors influencing a wide range of human security and international development issues. To what extent do they influence politics and policy globally, and what kind of impact do they have? How do they become influential, how do they get the work done? What are the challenges they both face and pose? In what ways is NGO advocacy changing international politics and institutions? In this course we examine NGOs as political actors whose influence extends to the global level. We begin by analyzing the nature of NGOs as political actors and their relationship to broader social movements, political institutions, and social goals in international settings. We examine how NGOs shape themselves and their work in relation to such broader contexts, and how they coordinate with other political actors to achieve change. We then learn how NGOs develop comprehensive and effective international advocacy plans, and we study core NGO tactics and their coordination in political actions. Throughout the course case studies demonstrate how theory, context, and practice are linked. Students also select their own case study for assignments, which are inter-linked as part of a term-long simulation in which the political strategies of real NGOs are evaluated, an original international coalition is formed, and a convincing global strategy of action on common political goals is developed. Students therefore learn to effectively analyze NGOs’ international political action while gaining practical skills for international NGO influence. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

PIA 2526 Micropolitics: NGOs, Civil Society and Development

9:00-11:55 AM
3415 Posvar Hall
Nelson, Paul

NGOs and civil society organizations are political actors, deliberately or not, and this course explores the politics of their work and their key relationships, introducing tools and practices used by leading organizations. Both northern and southern-based NGOs are examined, as well as their interactions with aid donors, international organizations, trade unions, and social movements. Students completing the course will be able to critically assess development practitioners’ and scholars’ statements about civil society; recognize and critically assess major theoretical perspectives on civil society; investigate and analyze civil society in national and sub-national settings; analyze policy, cultural, legal, and other factors that shape and constrain civil society; identify the variables likely to influence a citizen movement or NGO’s success in policy advocacy; recognize methods used in aspects of NGO work.
PIA –PUBLIC & INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS (cont’d)
The course is organized into four parts: (1) concepts of civil society and non-governmental action; (2) mapping civil societies, both local and national, in detail; (3) concepts and practices in international civil society assistance; and (4) assessing civil society influence on local and national policies. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

The millennium development goals prioritize investment in health for human welfare. We examine underlying economic problems and proposed policy solutions to address major diseases health issues such as aids, TB, malaria, diarrhea, and respiratory illnesses. We examine challenges in addressing children’s and women's health issues, including child labor and trafficking. We study world trade organization (WTO) provisions that assist or impede poor countries’ access to drugs. We study WTO cases on health protection (e.g., us-eu beef hormone debate). We discuss the costs and benefits of genetically modified organisms in our food supply. Students’ case presentations examine cases of successful global health interventions (e.g., small pox eradication, arresting aids in Thailand) and new challenges (SARS, avian flu, health-related impacts of climate change), as well as the roles of the world bank, the world health organization, corporations, NGOs, and civil society in improving public health in developing countries. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

PIA 2707 Urbanization and Sustainability Development International Context
TBA  TBA

Gonzales-Rivas, Marcela
This course examines the relationship between economic development and urbanization, with an emphasis on understanding how the process of growth is associated with urbanization and its consequences. The course is divided into three sections. The first is a general overview of global trends of urbanization and development, as well as an introduction to principal development debates. The second section covers the principal theories relating urbanization and development. The last section of the course focuses on key issues that have emerged during the rapid urbanization of the developing world, ranging from growing income inequality, poverty, and socio-economic exclusion, to the informal economy and rising violence. We examine the policies and processes that have attempted to address these issues, such as participatory community planning, anti-poverty programs, etc. Though the course takes a broad theoretical perspective on these processes, there is a focus on Latin America when looking at examples. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

2509 Social Behavioral Science
15097  Mo  Enroll  Terry, Martha
       6:00 PM-9:00 PM  Limit 75
       A115 Public Health Building

The core course provides an overview of the social and behavioral sciences and their importance in the inter-disciplinary field of public health. A primary emphasis is on the social-ecological model, its application to public health issues, and its use in the development of policies, strategies, interventions and programs. The course content will introduce students to several relevant social and behavioral theories as well as a range of community health assessment and planning models used by public health professionals in both domestic and international venues. Through a series of assigned readings, discussion exercises, group projects, quizzes and written assignments, students will enhance their knowledge and awareness of the role of social and behavioral sciences in public health and its relevance to their specific discipline. At the conclusion of the course students will be able to: identify the important social and behavioral determinants of health; describe the inter-relationships between the social, behavioral, bio-medical, physiological, and environmental factors related to individual and community health; identify the major health disparities related to social, behavioral and economic factors; describe the role of culture and socio-economic status in health behavior, access to services, and decision-making; and understand the importance of community partnerships and participatory approaches in the development, implementation, management and evaluation of community policies and programs. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.

15083  Mo  Enroll  Documet, Patricia
       5:00 PM-7:55 PM  Limit 15
       A719 Public Health Building

The goal of the course is to give students a basic understanding of social and behavioral sciences research principles, as well as how these methods are implemented in the field of public health. The relationship of applied research to program evaluation, the link of theory to research, and the translation of research information to applied public health programs and policies will be emphasized. Participatory research will be highlighted. Quantitative and qualitative strategies, research designs, data collection methods, participant selection, and data analysis will be covered. Work must be on Latin America for certificate credit.
