Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences foreign culture, non-Western culture requirement or other general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts and conferences. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only pre-requisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in upper and lower case are international courses in which at least 25% of the content is Latin American. To have international courses count towards the certificate, focus your work on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

Other Courses: Students may, with the permission of the CLAS advisor, register for a course with international content, a directed study, independent study or readings course taught by a CLAS faculty member. These courses will count towards the certificate/related concentration only if the student focuses specifically on a Latin American topic for the course.

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master's level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s major. The primary academic department of the faculty member teaching the course determines how the course will be counted. Examples: A course taught by Prof. Barry Ames that is cross-listed in Political Science and GSPIA will be counted as a course in Political Science (the primary academic department of Prof. Ames) no matter if the student registers for the course under GSPIA or PS. A course taught by Prof. John Beverley that is cross-listed in Spanish, English Literature, and Cultural Studies will be counted as a course in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (the primary academic department of Prof. Beverley).

Faculty: Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396 if your course contains 25% Latin American content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
SCHEDULE OF LATIN AMERICAN AREA STUDIES COURSES
FALL TERM (AUGUST 30 – DECEMBER 18)

All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document.

Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website:
www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

School and Faculty of Arts and Sciences
Study Abroad Programs are offered in many countries of the Caribbean, Mesoamerica, Central and South America. Students should contact the Study Abroad Office, 802 William Pitt Union, to arrange study programs of 3 to 18 credits. See the CLAS Academic Advisor to verify how credits will count towards completion of the certificate or related concentration in Latin American Studies. Six Weeks, Twelve Weeks, Full Term – Study in Latin America for part or all of the summer.

When the Spanish conquerors arrived in Mexico and Guatemala they found large cities with impressive temples raised on tall pyramids, lavish palaces for rulers, elaborate markets, and skilled craftsmen working in gold, copper, feathers, stone pottery, and other materials. They were astonished to find a civilization so like their own in some respects and yet so different (so "barbaric" to European eyes) in other ways. In this course we will explore this civilization and then trace its development from its remote roots three thousand years before the arrival of Cortez. Our exploration will center on examining the archaeological and historical evidence left by people in earlier periods and reconstructing the patterns of their lives and cultures. Recitation sections will concentrate on discussion of exercises and of the methods archaeologists use to reconstruct the past.

A laboratory class providing training and practice in the elicitation from a native-speaking informant of information about a language unknown to the members of the class. The group will attempt to develop a linguistic analysis of the information in phonological, grammatical, lexical, and possibly cultural areas. Students will be required to work with the informant outside as well as in class. Requirements: Grading will be based on attendance, performance in information eliciting sessions, and two analytical papers one on the phonology and one on some aspect of the grammar of the language under study. The purpose of the course is to train students to collect, store, analyze, and write up descriptions of linguistic material they have collected personally through direct interviewing of a single native speaker throughout the term.

This language oriented course will touch on several areas within the very rich cultural and linguistic tradition of the Mayan speaking peoples of Mexico, Guatemala, Belize, and Honduras. About 20% of the course will be devoted to an orientation identifying the various Mayan peoples and locating them within their Meso American cultural milieu. The rest of the course, accessed through texts in English, will focus on Mayan hieroglyphic writing, the history revealed in texts in Epigraphic Mayan, and the traditional literature of the Mayans, especially as embodied in the Poopol Wuuj (Popol Vuh), a K’iche’ mythical, legendary, and historical narrative of the 16th century. Some of the course content will be fine tuned to relate to the special interests of the students once that has been learned. Prerequisites: none, except a determination to learn the basics of a language totally unlike any you have ever learned. Any background in linguistics, anthropology, Meso America, and languages other than English will be helpful.

This course examines the origin and characteristics of urban life. After reviewing the nature of cities in the modern world, attention will focus on prehistoric cities in the Old World and New World, and the social, political, ecological and demographic processes that led to their development. The focus of the course is on archaeological cities, but ethnographic and sociological studies of modern urban forms will be extensively used. The purpose of the course is to give students a comparative understanding and appreciation of urban life and its long history. Prerequisite(s): none

Undergraduate Seminar. This course centers its attention on the complex interplay between demographic processes and outcomes (such as fertility and population growth, population decline and mortality, and migration) on the one hand, and social/cultural evolution and social/cultural forms studied by cultural anthropologists and archaeologists. We will critically review major concepts and theories in demography and demographic anthropology. This course takes the subject matter of population dynamics as the framework for examining important anthropological themes, debates and theories in the context of different societies and cultures. This is an honors college level course that requires a great deal of critical reading and writing. THIS COURSE IS NOT OPEN TO GRADUATE STUDENTS. Prerequisite(s): none

This course centers attention on the interplay between gender, sexuality, class, and reproductive behavior in diverse socio-cultural contexts. The starting point are critiques from within and outside of socio-cultural anthropology (especially social history) that mainstream, positivist demography has not adequately dealt with (theoretically and methodologically) with how cross-cultural expressions and variations of gender, sexuality, and class have shaped reproductive behavior. This course will survey key works in anthropological demography, social history, and feminist demography with the objective of exploring the emergence of “whole demographies” (Kertzer) that seek to demonstrate the importance of “situating” reproductive behavior in “the sociocultural and political economic context in which it is embedded,” and that “historicize demographic analysis” by viewing historical and power-laden processes as “ingredient[s] in the making of reproduction” (Greenhalgh).

This course focuses on economies which are less technically and institutionally developed and in which per capita incomes are low. Over 80% of the world's population lives in these countries and their economies are assuming an increasingly important role in the global economic system. The functioning of agriculture, industry, and international trade and finance will be outlined. Alternative government policy options will be considered. The effects of roles played by government, population growth, income distribution, health care and education in the process of economic development will be discussed. The course will concentrate on the economic aspects of development.

This course explores the transnational connections amongst different literatures, regions, and languages of the Americas, which came to be understood collectively with the 15th century European voyages as the "New World". We will raise such questions as: How does literature play a role in constructing people's visions of the world? What constitutes a literary tradition? In what traditions do the texts we read participate? How do those traditions overlap and differ? We will address these questions by reading several texts from the "New World," situating the texts with respect to one another, as well as to texts from the "Old World."

Modernism first flourished from about 1900 to 1945 in works by writers such as Conrad, Eliot, Joyce, Woolf, Pound, Stein, and Faulkner. Metropolitan modernist literature was influenced by rapid technological change, the increased visibility of war, interest in psychology and the irrational, and, most importantly, the changing relations between Britain and its colonies. We'll begin with a historical examination of the period, but Modernism is also understood as something formally new or experimental. The works are often difficult, emphasizing fragmentation, shifts in time and a self-conscious relation of present to past. Taking these cues, we'll examine the stakes in modernism's wish to tell a "new" story, and juxtapose its agenda to the realism against which it defines itself, thereby staging a dialogue between British and African, Caribbean, or Indian writers. We will also give some time to minority US writers.

Everybody talks about globalization but they do not all mean the same thing. By ‘globalization’ we mean growing global interconnectedness. Such interconnectedness is not new. It occurred to varying degrees through much of human history, but it appears to be intensifying in recent decades. Usually historians write and read national histories and work within national boundaries. However, if global interconnectedness is indeed intensifying, scholars and students of history will have to learn to think globally or they will not be able to fully understand human affairs. We propose to introduce students to global thinking not by attempting an overview of world history, but analyzing three relatively recent developments: the political upheaval and student unrest of 1968, the global (?) economic crisis of 1973 to 1975, and the end of the Cold War after the breakdown of European socialism around 1990. We will pose overarching questions and then examine these events in four countries representing four world regions: Brazil (for Latin America), Japan (for Asia), Germany (for Europe), and the USA. We will look at similarities and differences among the four countries, and ask whether global processes explain the similarities and differences. This class is especially designed for students in History, UCIS and Global Studies but other students are equally welcome.

This course surveys the history of sport, focusing primarily on the twentieth century. Its emphasis is on the changing nature and meaning of sport. It tackles several questions, including why and how sport evolved from a community pastime to today's corporate money ball, what sport has meant to people in different societies and epochs, and what roles race, gender, and the media have played in sport. We will look at sport in settings that range from baseball in the Caribbean to basketball among the Crow on the reservations of Montana, as well as focus on the role of sport in Pittsburgh. This course will be taught as a seminar and requires a high degree of participation. As an honors course, it requires a commitment to reading, participating, and writing.

An introduction to the historical literature on Brazil, from 1500 to the present. In that literature, several questions recur: What have been the long-term legacies of Portuguese colonialism and African slavery in Brazil? How have Brazilians thought, talked, and acted about their multiracial, multicultural society? How have they struggled to resolve the contradictions between formal political equality (democratic citizenship) and extreme social and economic inequality? We will explore these and other questions in works drawn from the fields of history, anthropology, political science, and sociology.

The Less-Commonly-Taught Languages Center makes it possible to study foreign languages not available in other language departments in the University. Up to four courses may be taken in the languages that are offered, for a total of 14 credits over four semesters. LCTL courses make use of the most appropriate language-learning materials available from various sources. Textbooks are available for individual purchase at the Book Center; recorded material may often be duplicated through the language lab for home study in conjunction with our courses. For courses that require special enrollment counseling, authorization may be obtained from LCTL staff members in G-47 CL. Further information can be obtained by calling 624-5512.

The Less-Commonly-Taught Languages Center makes it possible to study foreign languages not available in other language departments in the University. Up to four courses may be taken in the languages that are offered, for a total of 14 credits over four semesters. LCTL courses make use of the most appropriate language-learning materials available from various sources. Textbooks are available for individual purchase at the Book Center; recorded material may often be duplicated through the language lab for home study in conjunction with our courses. For courses that require special enrollment counseling, authorization may be obtained from LCTL staff members in G-47 CL. Further information can be obtained by calling 624-5512.

This course is designed to give linguists training in carrying out field work aimed at language description. Some of the classroom time will be devoted to orientation of students to the necessities and skills of elicitation; most of the classroom time will be devoted to elicitation from a speaker. A single language will be the focus of the elicitation. In addition to the classroom elicitation, each student will spend 10 hours outside of class eliciting from the language consultant. Students will prepare two research papers: one focusing on the phonology, one on some aspect of grammar. Students will learn how to elicit data and store it; part of how to analyze it and write it up they should already know, but their skills in all areas should be seriously enhanced and advanced by the work done in this course. Attendance is compulsory. This seminar is for linguistics students who have had all the basic courses in phonetics, phonology, morphology, and syntax. The purpose of the course is to train students to collect, store, analyze, and write up descriptions of linguistic material they have collected personally through direct interviewing of a single native speaker throughout the term.
Prerequisite(s): Previous or concurrent enrollment in LING 1578, 1579, 1773, and 1777, or consent of instructor. This course is offered every term.

This language-oriented course will touch on several areas within the very rich cultural and linguistic tradition of the Mayan-speaking peoples of Mexico, Guatemala, Belize, and Honduras. About 20% of the course will be devoted to an orientation identifying the various Mayan peoples and locating them within their Meso-American cultural milieu. The rest of the course, accessed through texts in English, will focus on Mayan hieroglyphic writing, the history revealed in texts in Epigraphic Mayan, and the traditional literature of the Mayans, especially as embodied in the Popool Wuuj (Popol Vuh), a K’iche’ mythical, legendary, and historical narrative of the 16th century. Some of the course content will be fine-tuned to relate to the special interests of the students once that has been learned.
Prerequisite(s): none, except a determination to learn the basics of a language totally unlike any you have ever learned. Any background in linguistics, anthropology, Meso-America, and languages other than English will be helpful.

Focusing on a variety of musical traditions throughout the world, this course addresses factors that have influenced historical and contemporary musical performance practices. Special attention is placed on how political, economic, social, and religious factors influence musical aesthetics and notions of identity among performers and audiences. Positioning music within a broader context of postcolonial, technological, and translational development, this course analyzes the ever-changing relationship between traditional and modern socio-musical approaches toward performance techniques, musical transmission, and intercultural exchange.

We will consider how leaders and political institutions have shaped presidential governments in Latin America. This is not a traditional lecture course. I have designed the seminar so that all members (including the instructor) will work as a research team and complete a project together. Throughout the term all students will: 1) study the history of a particular country; 2) collect systematic evidence on presidential leadership in that country; and 3) analyze the country’s political development. Grades will be based on the quality of this work—as opposed to your capacity to memorize concepts for an exam.

This course explores the theories, history, and issues in international political economy. International political economy has been described as “the reciprocal and dynamic interaction in international relations of the pursuit of power and the pursuit of wealth.” The purpose of this course is to examine those interactions — between power and wealth, the state and the market — from a number of competing perspectives and different levels of analysis. We will focus on the causes and consequences of international trade and monetary relations; the growth of regional integration; the role of hegemony in maintaining the stability of international economic systems; and strategies of economic development and transition.

This course introduces students to the cultural history of the Hispanic World. Starting with the study of Pre-Colombian civilizations and the controversial politics of the Spanish Conquest we will discuss the conflicts involved in the transformation of Latin America. Through a broad variety of texts; chronicles, documentaries, films, fiction and novels, students will learn about the Spanish-speaking world and also explore the complex interactions implied in the process of colonization, in the foundation of national identities and in the creation of cultural traditions. We will stress the importance that these social and political tensions have in order to understand the past but also we will analyze its impact in the present.

The impact of the literature on cinema and vice versa could be traced from the earliest Latin America productions. Canonic writers such as Gabriel García Márquez for instance, have played an important and active role in the development of different national cinemas. From Borges, Cortázar, Amado, Vargas Llosa, and Carpentier, and more recently Antonio Skármeta and Isabel Allende have seen many of their works in the screen, produced by numbers of filmmakers, including internationally renowned directors as Jean-Luc Godard, Antonio Bertolucci, and Michelangelo Antonioni. In this interdisciplinary course, students will be introduced to a selection of Latin American writers and to film analysis, emphasizing social and political issues. We will find connections and tensions between texts and films that will lead us to think film as a peculiar interpretation of texts. Students will participate in discussions and group activities, write analytical and critical essays, and give oral presentations. This course will be taught in Spanish.

This course examines the different narratives, epistemologies, and politics prevalent during the emergence Europe as center of the modern world—what is often called, the period of discovery and conquest. During this process were laid out Latin American societies and cultures, including many of the contradictions that characterize them today. After going over a set of theoretical readings, the course examines three sets of textual corpuses. First, the evolution of Spanish texts as their writers faced the challenges of narrating discovery, cultural contact, conquest, and colonization. We will examine the tropes of the master imperial narrative as well as its moments of hesitation and open critique. Second, the emergence of a new mestizo consciousness that expressed itself in the work of indigenous intellectuals. We will see how their texts contested Spanish claims of mastery, at times strategically appropriating epistemological certainties of the master narrative, at time using elements of Spaniards critical of Spanish colonialism, and at times deploying alternative (native) epistemologies. Third, the context within which Spaniards and Amerindians produced their contesting texts: the slow emergence of England as a competing imperial power. In particular, we will study the way in which early English colonial narratives struggled to make Englishmen different from, and superior to, Spaniards. Although the course focuses on the colonial period, much of what we’ll be discussing has its contemporary echoes in Latin America, and establishing past/present connections is part of its goal. This course takes novels of Alejo Carpentier and their conceptual and ideological framing as point of departure for a study of the dynamic of writing and (racialized) otherness in the Caribbean and Latin America. While the question of dominance as a primary aspect of coloniality will be an important concern of the course, its axis of analysis will be the attempts at and the desire for cultural inclusiveness by writers in the dominant tradition (their writing of transculturation), and those efforts by minority writers at articulating a creolized reality even as they attempt to recuperate a submerged ancestral (African) culture. The readings will be informed by the perspectives of Said, Bhaba, Retamar, Fanon, Brathwaite, Glissant, Zapata Olivella, Antonio Cornejo Polar, Canclini, Angel Rama. Novelist will include Carpentier, Jorge Isaacs, Roberto Burgos Cantor, Jorge Amado, Jean Ryhs, Adalberto Ortiz, Manuel Zapata Olivella, Mayra Santos Febres, José Lezama Lima. The narratives are available in their Spanish or Portuguese originals as well as in English translation in many cases. This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an International perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of U.S. Drug Policy, which will be included. Gender, race and class are overlapping categories of experience that affect all aspects of life. There is perhaps no other context in which the effects of gender, race and class are as acutely evident as in the criminal justice system. That is, the people who are processed through the criminal justice system are disproportionately male, nonwhite, and from the lower classes. This class is designed to examine the cumulative and interlocking effects of gender, race, and class on crime.

06:00 PM-09:00 PM Limit 25
3911 W. W. Posvar Hall
This is an introductory course in the field of international affairs (ia). It is designed to give students knowledge of the major theoretical approaches and issues in international politics. The course introduces students to basic concepts and schools of thought in ia and examines major institutions and processes through which foreign policies are made and implemented. A major objective is to relate theories and models to major national and international policy debates through the close examination of case studies. Reference will be made throughout to contemporary developments. The interlocking objectives of this course are: 1) to provide a grounding in the nature and characteristics of international affairs; 2) to develop a broad understanding of the outstanding features of today’s world and how it differs from other periods; and 3) to learn the key concepts for categorizing and analyzing the dynamics of international politics.
Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.
Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

3911 W. W. Posvar Hall

This course introduces the core concepts of human security, examines the institutions and practices that promote those concepts, and probes the utility of human security as an approach to addressing the challenges of protecting peoples’ lives and livelihoods in the 21st century. The course is intended to provide students with the ability to carry out informed, professional analysis of key issues and debates associated with violent threats to individuals, and with non-violent threats such as poverty, disease, and lack of access to resources. Upon completing this course students will be familiar with influential and innovative organizations working on human security issues. Part I of the course define human security and places it in intellectual and policy context. Part II addresses “freedom from fear” with a focus on the physical threats to civilians during armed conflict. Part III identifies challenges societies face during the transition from war to peace, with a focus on transitional justice. Part IV addresses “freedom from want” with attention to topics related to economic well being and development. The assignments are designed to sharpen students: ability to make compelling, analytic, policy-relevant presentations and arguments.
Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.
Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

Can developing countries maintain welfare states in the era of globalization? Do they have the capacity to ensure that markets can coexist with strong social policies? This course examines the redistributive effects of globalization and its consequences for the social welfare of people in developing countries. The extent of government responsibility to protect and promote the welfare of citizens in developing countries under conditions of globalization has been at the center of political economy and policy debates for the last two decades. This course examines the impact of such changes in the context of labor, education, health, and social security policy. Upon completing this course students should be able to critically assess existing models, understand recent challenges, and predict sustainable approaches for the future. The course is divided into (1) introduction and theoretical context; (2) comparison of welfare states in developed and developing countries; (3) recent challenges; (4) case studies.
Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.
Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

2501 Development Policy and Administration

12:00 PM-02:55 PM  Limit 18
3610 W. W. Posvar Hall

This is a survey of development policies, issues, institutions, and resources for professionals working in development. Lectures, discussions, and presentations in class focus on analysis of development policies, and on new and significant policy issues, skills, methodologies, and resources. The course helps students develop the ability to analyze development issues from several perspectives, understand the breadth of international development as a field of professional service and academic study, and clarify their priorities for acquiring skills in preparation for that service. Students completing the course will be able to grasp the history of approaches and experiences with development, identify and critically analyze major institutions involved, assess political and institutional environments of development, employ some key social science and administrative tools, and recognize and understand principles of other significant skills and emerging methodologies in development practice. The course is organized in three parts: 1) dynamics of development and social change; 2) development management: who’s in charge?; and 3) contemporary issues and skills. Throughout the course we will introduce, discuss, and return to case studies that illuminate key issues and themes: the global hiv/aids pandemic, microfinance programs in development, the chad-cameroon oil pipeline project, water system privatization, and the global and local food prices and production. Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.
Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.

Combined with PS 2379, Limit 30

The course considers the characteristics of economic growth and conditions in the developing countries today, and the determinants of levels of output, consumption, capital formation and income distribution. Attention is focused on simple growth models as well as on dynamic dual economy models of development. The sources of economic growth are surveyed along with the role of investment, population, labor productivity and education.

Particular attention is given to the role of agriculture in development and to the potential contribution of foreign investment. The role of the expansion of domestic markets in industrialization is also considered. Policies designed to accelerate development are reviewed and assessed.

Prerequisite(s): PIA 2008 Economics of Public Affairs or a waiver

Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

2513 Religion and Development

3610 W. W. Posvar Hall
Enroll Limit 35

Religious ideas, belief, and institutions are part of virtually every setting in which development practitioners work. This course will involve students actively in understanding the roles of religion in social and economic change, the variety of experiences with religious institutions and movements in poor societies, and the significance of religion in a number of key policy areas. We will approach religion from multiple perspectives, reading and critiquing economic, sociological and anthropological analyses. Readings focus primarily on three religious traditions (Christianity, Islam and Buddhism), but research and presentations on other traditions is encouraged.

Students will be expected to take an active role, reading critically, writing two papers, and analyzing practical cases in this course. We will explore the significance of culture and religious beliefs and institutions in local and global development, covering four broad topics: cultural factors in local and national development; religious traditions and the ethics and practice of development; the nature and significance of faith-based institutions in global affairs; and the relevance of religion in several key policy areas, including environment, human rights, democracy, conflict resolution, and social movements.

The course will count toward GSPIA’s NGO and Civil Society major, and will be of interest to students interested in community development, ethics, culture, and (of course) religion. Students will be able to focus on a region or country of interest for their research and presentations to the class.

Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.

Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

2552 Managing Organizations in Development

09:00 AM-11:55 AM
3600 W. W. Posvar Hall
Enroll Limit 15

This course examines the management of organizations working in international development and humanitarian assistance with a focus on NGO management. This course has three key objectives. The first is to introduce students to the work and environment faced by development organizations. The second is to provide theoretical and practical frameworks for the analysis of management challenges and generation of relevant recommendations. Big questions we investigate include: why are NGOs fundamental for development? How can NGOs improve their accountability and effectiveness? How to best approach a complex decision problem? What are the key opportunities and dangers in organizational "partnerships" between governments and NGOs, northern and southern organizations, etc.? How can NGOs leverage community participation? The third objective is to help students develop transferable management skills, which will help them get a job in international development. Assignments emphasize primary research and focus on building critical writing, analytical, and presentation skills that demonstrate a broad understanding of the key management challenges facing development organizations.

Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only. Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.

This class presents a relatively non-technical description of neoclassical labor market theory with contrasts to institutional and political economy approaches. The primary focus of this course will be on developing an understanding of the determinants of wage rates and employment levels in the labor markets, the role of education and training in wage determination; the consequences of government intervention in solving social problems (e.g. the minimum wage issue); poverty, inequality, income distribution, and labor migration issues. For each theory, empirical studies from different countries (Africa, Asia, Latin America, and Central and Eastern Europe) are presented and the conclusions from these studies are the basis for evaluating public policy proposal.
Prerequisite(s): Graduate School of Public and International Affairs students only.

The impact of population growth, distribution, and change on social, economic, environmental, and health relationships is presented with a focus on the sociopolitical responses to population dynamics. Several overarching themes (history, environment, international policy, national policy/laws) will be used to look at population problems across several cultures. Students will be asked to select a country to explore using these broad topics. Mexico will be used as the “model”. Students wishing to have this course count towards the Certificate in Latin American Studies must select a Latin American nation for exploration. Note: Students must concentrate their work on Latin America in order for this course to count towards the certificate.
