UNIVERSITY OF PITTSBURGH

LATIN AMERICAN COURSE LIST

FALL (2121)
Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences foreign culture or non-Western culture requirement or other general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts, conferences, and the annual Latin American and Caribbean Festival. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas or call 412-648-7392 for a printed copy.

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only pre-requisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in Upper and Lower Case are international courses in which at least 25% of the content is Latin American. To have international courses count towards the certificate, focus your work on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master's level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s major. The primary academic department of the faculty member teaching the course determines how the course will be counted. Examples: A course taught by Prof. Barry Ames that is cross-listed in Political Science and GSPIA will be counted as a course in Political Science (the primary academic department of Prof. Ames) no matter if the student registers for the course under GSPIA or PS. A course taught by Prof. John Beverley that is cross-listed in Spanish, English Literature, and Cultural Studies will be counted as a course in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (the primary academic department of Prof. Beverley).

Faculty: Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone x8-7396) if your course contains 25% Latin American content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
SCHEDULE OF LATIN AMERICAN AREA STUDIES COURSES
FALL TERM (AUGUST 29 - DECEMBER 09, 2011)

All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document.

Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website: www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

SCHOOL AND FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE--ARTSC
Study Abroad Programs are offered in many countries of the Caribbean, Mesoamerica, Central and South America. Students should contact the Study Abroad Office, 802 William Pitt Union, to arrange study programs of 3 to 18 credits. See the CLAS Academic Advisor to verify how credits will count towards completion of the certificate or related concentration in Latin American Studies. Six Weeks, Twelve Weeks, Full Term—Study in Latin America for part or all the summer.

When the Spanish conquerors arrived in Mexico and Guatemala they found large cities with impressive temples raised on tall pyramids, lavish palaces for rulers, elaborate markets, and skilled craftsmen working in gold, copper, feathers, stone pottery, and other materials. They were astonished to find a civilization so like their own in some respects and yet so different (so "barbaric" to European eyes) in other ways. In this course we will explore this civilization and then trace its development from its remote roots three thousand years before the arrival of Cortez. Our exploration will center on examining the archaeological and historical evidence left by people in earlier periods and reconstructing the patterns of their lives and cultures. Recitation sections will concentrate on discussion of exercises and of the methods archaeologists use to reconstruct the past.

This course centers its attention on the complex interplay between demographic processes and outcomes (such as fertility and population growth, population decline and mortality, and migration) on the one hand, and social/cultural evolution and social/cultural forms studied by cultural anthropologists and archaeologists. We will critically review major concepts and theories in demography and demographic anthropology. This course takes the subject matter of population dynamics as the framework for examining important anthropological themes, debates and theories in the context of different societies and cultures. Chiefdoms are often identified more by what they are not than by what they are: they are not egalitarian and they do not have the political institutions of states. In this seminar we will examine ethnographic, ethnohistoric, and especially archaeological evidence concerning the nature of society, polity, economy, and ideology of chiefdoms in various parts of the world, including at least North America, Polynesia, Europe, and Central and South America. We will explore the methods available to the archeologist for reconstructing such patterns of organization. We will evaluate models that have been proposed to account for the development of chiefdoms. And we will consider directions for future research on the subject.

Cross-cultural comparisons will reveal the similarities and diversity in the composition, function, and nature of domestic units. Previous archeological studies of households and domestic organization in the New and Old Worlds will be reviewed. Topics to be addressed include: the archeological definition of domestic units: modeling diachronic change in domestic life, analysis of spatial patterns at the household level, and proxemic and symbolic approaches to the prehistoric dwelling. In addition, the seminar will consider the relationship between households and larger social structure and the "alternative" perspective afforded by the "household view" of the past. This course is offered every two years.

This course centers attention on the interplay between gender, sexuality, class, and reproductive behavior in diverse socio-cultural contexts. The starting point are critiques from within and outside of socio-cultural anthropology (especially social history) that mainstream, positivist demography has not adequately dealt with (theoretically and methodologically) with how cross-cultural expressions and variations of gender, sexuality, and class have shaped reproductive behavior. This course will survey key works in anthropological demography, social history, and feminist demography with the objective of exploring the emergence of “whole demographies” (Kertzer) that seek to demonstrate the importance of “situating” reproductive behavior in “the sociocultural and political economic context in which it is embedded,” and that “historicize demographic analysis” by viewing historical and power-laden processes as “ingredient[s] in the making of reproduction” (Greenhalgh).

This Pitt—CMU weekend joint course provides a brief, thematic overview of some of the emerging factors shaping Brazil today. As global citizens, students need to have a working knowledge of other countries which are important in shaping the corporate, social and political world. As a rising state in the world economy, Brazil’s status in the business and in world affairs is shifting in a transformative way.

After an overview of Brazil, this course will provide an introduction to Brazil in three dimensions: its diverse groups of people, the growth and development of the Brazilian economy and institutions and the environmental issues and challenges in modern Brazil.

This course explores the transnational connections amongst different literatures, regions, and languages of the Americas, which came to be understood collectively with the 15th century European voyages as the "New World". We will raise such questions as: How does literature play a role in constructing people's visions of the world? What constitutes a literary tradition? In what traditions do the texts we read participate? How do those traditions overlap and differ? We will address these questions by reading several texts from the "New World," situating the texts with respect to one another, as well as to texts from the "Old World."

Modernism first flourished from about 1900 to 1945 in works by writers such as Conrad, Eliot, Joyce, Woolf, Pound, Stein, and Faulkner. Metropolitan modernist literature was influenced by rapid technological change, the increased visibility of war, interest in psychology and the irrational, and, most importantly, the changing relations between Britain and its colonies. We'll begin with a historical examination of the period, but Modernism is also understood as something formally new or experimental. The works are often difficult, emphasizing fragmentation, shifts in time and a self-conscious relation of present to past. Taking these cues, we'll examine the stakes in modernism's wish to tell a "new" story, and juxtapose its agenda to the realism against which it defines itself, thereby staging a dialogue between British and African, Caribbean, or Indian writers. We will also give some time to minority US writers.

<td>Modern Europe's imperial expansion began in the late 1400s with the founding of the Spanish and Portuguese colonies in the New World. The history of those colonies is a dramatic one, beginning with the Spanish conquest of the great Aztec and Inca empires; continuing through the silver and gold rushes in Mexico, Peru, and Brazil; the creation of plantation and hacienda systems; the formation of new social and cultural groups as colonial rule evolved; and the radical revolution initiated by enslaved men and women in the Caribbean. This course surveys that 300-year history, focusing on the creation of New World societies in which Africans, Indians, and Europeans lived and worked together; the creation of colonial economies tied to the rising capitalist powers of Western Europe; and the tensions and conflicts in the colonial world that ultimately brought French, Spanish, and Portuguese rule in the Americas to an end. 1017 Globalization and History

Olstein, Diego

Everybody talks about globalization but they do not all mean the same thing. Such interconnectedness is not new. It occurred – to varying degrees – through much of human history, but appears to be intensifying in recent decades. For historians, exploring globalization poses practical problems. (By ‘globalization’, we mean growing global interconnectedness.) Usually historians write – and read – national histories and work within national boundaries. However, if global interconnectedness is indeed intensifying, scholars and students of history will have to learn to think globally or they will not be able to fully understand human affairs. We introduce students to global thinking not by attempting an overview of world history, but analyzing in depth selected historical episodes and processes that operated simultaneously in many parts of the globe. After a brief stop in the 14th century (to illustrate that globalism is not new), we will investigate three relatively recent developments: the political upheaval and student unrest of 1968, the global (?) economic crisis of 1973 to 1975, and the end of the Cold War after the breakdown of European socialism around 1990. Each time we will pose overarching questions and then examine events in four countries representing four world regions: Brazil (for Latin America), China (for Asia), Germany (for Europe), and the USA. We will look at similarities and differences among the countries, links between them, and ask whether global processes explain the similarities and differences.

The purpose of this course is to introduce students to the study of the Portuguese overseas empire in the early modern period by adopting a non-conventional perspective. In addition to offering a chronological and geographical framework of Portuguese expansion, the course will focus on the social and cultural interactions that emerged from the permanent contact of the Portuguese with non-Europe societies in Africa, Asia, and the Americas. The aim of the course is to consider Portuguese overseas expansion within the broader context of the early modern world and to investigate the notions of globalization associated with the Portuguese Empire. We will examine themes of global political, social and religious experiences, interactions and connections as well as issues of the globalization of art and culture.

1500 Posvar Hall
This course ranges widely over the past five hundred years of Latin American history to explore the lives of women in all their complexity and diversity, from colonial nuns to nineteenth-century prostitutes, from indigenous marketwomen to movie stars. Women's lives in Latin America have embodied a series of contradictions that make us rethink U.S.-based assumptions about gender, sexuality, and power. This is a region where women's economic power has rarely brought sexual autonomy; where traditional gender roles coexist with broad acceptance of a spectrum of sexual identities; where devout Catholicism and the exaltation of motherhood have at times fueled radical political action by women. We will draw on films, documentaries, and autobiographies as well as the writings of historians and anthropologists. Our goal will be to map out the differences between and commonalities among Latin American women and understand how these changed over time. Along the way we examine the major political, economic, and social trends in Latin American history, asking how women’s choices contributed to them as well as how women’s lives were affected by them.

A laboratory class providing training and practice in the elicitation from a native-speaking informant of information about a language unknown to the members of the class. The group will attempt to develop a linguistic analysis of the information in phonological, grammatical, lexical, and possibly cultural areas. Students will be required to work with the informant outside as well as in class. Requirements: Grading will be based on attendance, performance in information eliciting sessions, and two analytical papers one on the phonology and one on some aspect of the grammar of the language under study. The purpose of the course is to train students to collect, store, analyze, and write up descriptions of linguistic material they have collected personally through direct interviewing of a single native speaker throughout the term.

Focusing on a variety of musical traditions throughout the world, this course addresses factors that have influenced historical and contemporary musical performance practices. Special attention is placed on how political, economic, social, and religious factors influence musical aesthetics and notions of identity among performers and audiences. Positioning music within a broader context of postcolonial, technological, and transnational development, this course analyzes the ever-changing relationship between traditional and modern socio-musical approaches toward performance techniques, musical transmission, and intercultural exchange.

This course provides students with basic information about a range of political systems outside the United States and teaches them to use that information to examine major theories about politics. The course is also designed to help students understand the government and the politics of the United States in comparative perspective and to develop some understanding of comparative methodology and the logic of comparison as a social science method. Depending on the interests, area of expertise, and inclinations of the particular instructor, some regions and topics might be emphasized more heavily than others.

This course will examine the major problems involved in the study and understanding of change in "less developed countries," the main approaches and theories applied to these problems, and the criticisms directed at some of these approaches. In particular, it will consider attempts to understand "development" by reference to the earlier experiences of Europe and the United States and will evaluate the relevance of such an approach to the current problems of the underdeveloped world. (Comparative Field)

4625 Posvar Hall

In this seminar we will study questions of presidential leadership, political development, and political instability in developing countries. We will consider how leaders and political institutions have shaped presidential governments in Latin America. This is not a traditional lecture course. I have designed the seminar so that all members (including the instructor) will work as a research team and complete a project together. Throughout the term all students will: 1) study the history of a particular country; 2) collect systematic evidence on presidential leadership in that country; and 3) analyze the country’s political development. Grades will be based on the quality of this work—as opposed to your capacity to memorize concepts for an exam.

This course focuses on the study of political parties from a comparative perspective. Students study a variety of countries (of their own choice) and learn to study them through surveys, electoral data, roll call data, and more qualitative information. Students also read and discuss political science analyses of political parties that discuss the form and function of political parties around the world. Each session also focuses on different aspects of writing, including style and paper organization.

This course explores the theories, history, and issues in international political economy. International political economy has been described as "the reciprocal and dynamic interaction in international relations of the pursuit of power and the pursuit of wealth." The purpose of this course is to examine those interactions — between power and wealth, the state and the market — from a number of competing perspectives and different levels of analysis. We will focus on the causes and consequences of international trade and monetary relations; the growth of regional integration; the role of hegemony in maintaining the stability of international economic systems; and strategies of economic development and transition. This is a web course with web-based instruction and web interaction is required.

This course introduces students to the cultural history of the Hispanic World. Starting with the study of Pre-Colombian civilizations and the controversial politics of the Spanish Conquest we will discuss the conflicts involved in the transformation of Latin America. Through a broad variety of texts; chronicles, documentaries, films, fiction and novels, students will learn about the Spanish-speaking world and also explore the complex interactions implied in the process of colonization, in the foundation of national identities and in the creation of cultural traditions. We will stress the importance that these social and political tensions have in order to understand the past but also we will analyze its impact in the present.

This course offers a survey of Afro-Hispanic writing in the twentieth century (poetry, short stories, novel) in its national and historical contexts. Note that in addition to studying writers from the Hispanic Caribbean and South America, we will also be studying writers from Equatorial Guinea, the only location on continental Africa where the official language is Spanish. One of the foci of the course lies in deciding what constitutes the specificity or specificities of writing by Hispanic writers of African descent.

2216 ADVANCED THEORY AND METHODOLOGY

21020 Th 03:00 PM-05:25 PM
1627 CL

This seminar will explore intersections between cultural studies, theatre history and critical feminist and corporeal theory in and through Latin American theatre and performance. We will focus on representative plays, performance artists and events that contend with gender, violence, and sexuality, both implicitly and explicitly. We will investigate three key themes: 1) the ontological implications of theatrical and performative documentation of the gendered body in relation to the state, violence and society 2) how actualities, representations and perceptions of Latin America and gender interface with North-South and East-West ideologies and hegemonies within the Americas and globally 3) historiographical trends within the field in relation to contemporary politics, violence and human rights activism.

These guiding themes will inform our critical and creative engagement with topics such as, for example, the murders in Ciudad Juarez, the Madres de la Plaza del Mayo, La Fomma, Griselda Gambaro, Sabina Berman and so on. Although the course will be conducted primarily in English, research in other languages is encouraged. Final papers may be written in English or Spanish.

This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an International perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of U.S. Drug Policy, which will be included. Finally, the various government tactics implemented to counter the threats mentioned herein as well as the impact on the private sector will be integrated into lectures throughout the program.

Organized crime is no longer confined to a few countries such as Italy, the United States, and Japan. During the 1980s and 1990s it has become much more pervasive, and has had a major impact in countries such as Russia and other countries in transition, Turkey, Mexico, and South Africa. This course looks at the dynamics of organized crime, explains why it develops in particular countries, the various forms it takes, and the responses of law enforcement agencies and international institutions. For this course to count towards your certificate the work must be on Latin America.

This course has two purposes. The first is to engage the student with the central themes and boundaries of public and international affairs including an awareness of the differences and similarities among various "specialisms" within this category of knowledge. The second is to encourage the student to reflect on pivotal theoretical issues which cut across specialisms and to apply these theoretical concerns to specific policy questions. Such knowledge and intellectual skills are essential for a career as a scholar of public and international affairs.
