Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences foreign culture or non-Western culture requirement or other general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts, conferences, and the annual Latin American and Caribbean Festival. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas or call 412-648-7392 for a printed copy.

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only pre-requisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in upper and lower case are international courses in which at least 25% of the content is Latin American. To have international courses count towards the certificate, focus your work on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master's level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s major. The primary academic department of the faculty member teaching the course determines how the course will be counted. Examples: A course taught by Prof. Barry Ames that is cross-listed in Political Science and GSPIA will be counted as a course in Political Science (the primary academic department of Prof. Ames) no matter if the student registers for the course under GSPIA or PS. A course taught by Prof. John Beverley that is cross-listed in Spanish, English Literature, and Cultural Studies will be counted as a course in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (the primary academic department of Prof. Beverley).

Faculty: Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone x8-7396) if your course contains at least 25% Latin American content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
SCHEDULE OF LATIN AMERICAN AREA STUDIES COURSES
FALL TERM (AUGUST 29 - DECEMBER 9, 2016)

All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document. Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website: www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

This course examines the history of people of African descent in Latin America (Spanish-speaking Caribbean, Latin America, and Brazil) from 1500 to the present. It explores how Africans and Afro-Latin Americans helped shape the political, economic, and cultural development of the region, and how they were in turn affected by those long-term processes of development. The course begins with the establishment of plantation slavery in the New World, the subsequent expansion of slavery, and the growth of a large free black population during the colonial period (1500-1820). We then look at the role of slaves and free people of color in the struggles for national independence and in the construction of new nations in the 1800s. Lastly, we will examine Afro-Latin Americans’ participation in twentieth-century political, cultural, and social movements, and the impact of those movements on the region. For the final project, students will create a multimedia website on Course Web that addresses salient issues in contemporary Afro-Latin America.

This course examines the development of Caribbean national and transnational identities in the 20th and early 21st centuries. Examples ranging from salsa music in Cuba, to the dish of Mofongo in Puerto Rico, to soccer in Jamaica, to nationalist narratives by Trinidadian C.L.R. James and migration literature by Haitian Edwidge Dandicat, exemplify how race relations, politics and culture have informed expressions of identity within and beyond the Caribbean region. This course will begin with theoretical readings on Caribbean identity, then we will explore comparative examples from the region and from Caribbean diasporic communities.

What do Akon and Rihanna have in common? They are both part of recent diasporas from Africa and the Caribbean. This course focuses on the issues and experiences of people of African descent in contemporary (20th and 21st centuries) migratory diasporas from both African and the Caribbean. The course draws on extensive literature on migration, transnationalism, racial and ethnic identity formation, health, and other topics to illuminate the causes for migration and the experiences that migrants have in different host countries. What experiences do migrants from Africa and the Caribbean share? How do their experiences differ? How do migrants define themselves in new host countries? How do they stay connected to their homelands?

When the Spanish conquerors arrived in Mexico and Guatemala they found large cities with impressive temples raised on tall pyramids, lavish palaces for rulers, elaborate markets, and skilled craftsmen working in gold, copper, feathers, stone pottery, and other materials. They were astonished to find a civilization so like their own in some respects and yet so different (so "barbaric" to European eyes) in other ways. In this course we will explore this civilization and then trace its development from its remote roots three thousand years before the arrival of Cortez. Our exploration will center on examining the archaeological and historical evidence left by people in earlier periods and reconstructing the patterns of their lives and cultures. Recitation sections will concentrate on discussion of essays.

The world’s third-largest democracy (after India and the United States), and a charter member of the BRIC countries (Brazil, Russia, India, China), Brazil is poised to play a crucial role in the 21st-century world. Yet what, if anything, do Americans know about Brazil? This course will introduce students to the country’s 500-year history, focusing on Brazil’s colonial-period and 19th-century experience of plantation agriculture and African slavery; the creation over time of its multiracial society and rich popular culture, embracing religion, music, dance, and sport; the country’s long-term efforts to achieve economic growth, political democracy, and social equality.
Gender is a key structuring principle of difference and inequality in society, while globalization is a condition characterized by time-space compression and ever-expanding connections across national boundaries. Globalization emerged out of such (and often violent) practices of contact as capitalism, colonialism, socialism, the Cold War, and neoliberalism. This course will explore the intersection of gender and globalization asking how gender shapes processes of globalization and how the role of gender is shifting as national/cultural regulatory systems are no longer able to maintain control over what is recognized as “normative” in the context of gender roles and gendered practices. Adopting an interdisciplinary approach, this course will draw on a range of materials including scholarly texts, fiction, and film to examine various facets of the interface between gender and globalization in such contexts as labor migration, gendered labor in transnational factories, maritime trade, and the high-tech industries, marriage and family, sex and colonialism, sex work and state violence, new reproductive technologies, as well as queer identities and activism. The particular historical contexts in which we will discuss these themes include colonialism, the Cold War Era, post-socialism, and neoliberalism.

Latin America’s history of economic development is unique, puzzling and interesting. This course uses data together with concepts and theories from the field of economic growth and development in order to understand the distinct features of economic performance in Latin American countries. Commonalities and differences among Latin American countries are analyzed. Topics covered include Latin American economic history, growth accounting, import substitution industrialization, trade policy, exchange rate policy and the current account, monetary and fiscal policy, macroeconomic stability, rural development, poverty and inequality, demographic change, health policy, economic growth and the environment, and Latin America in the global economy.

This course explores the transnational connections amongst different literatures, regions, and languages of the Americas, which came to be understood collectively with the 15th century European voyages as the "New World". We will raise such questions as: How does literature play a role in constructing people's visions of the world? What constitutes a literary tradition? In what traditions do the texts we read participate? How do those traditions overlap and differ? We will address these questions by reading several texts from the "New World," situating the texts with respect to one another, as well as to texts from the "Old World."

Modernism first flourished from about 1900 to 1945 in works by writers such as Conrad, Eliot, Joyce, Woolf, Pound, Stein, and Faulkner. Metropolitan modernist literature was influenced by rapid technological change, the increased visibility of war, interest in psychology and the irrational, and, most importantly, the changing relations between Britain and its colonies. We’ll begin with a historical examination of the period, but Modernism is also understood as something formally new or experimental. The works are often difficult, emphasizing fragmentation, shifts in time and a self-conscious relation of present to past. Taking these cues, we’ll examine the stakes in modernism’s wish to tell a “new” story, and juxtapose its agenda to the realism against which it defines itself, thereby staging a dialogue between British and African, Caribbean, or Indian writers. We will also give some time to minority US writers.

This course examines the social, economic, and political development of Latin America during the period of Spanish and Portuguese rule (c. 1500-c. 1825). It focuses on several recurring themes: • how Africans, Europeans, and indigenous peoples came together to create multiracial societies; • the role of religion in colonial life; • the development of the colonial economies; • which groups and individuals did what kinds of work, and how the fruits of that work were distributed; • the colonies' relationship to the rest of the Atlantic world.

This course is an introductory survey of world history starting from the human global migration out of Africa and up to the current global age. The course presents developments that impacted on humanity as a whole, such as clime changes, environmental issues, and plagues; patterns of development recurrent in different places of the world, including the emergence of agriculture, cities, and states; processes that brought different societies in contact, for example trade, migration, conquest, and cultural diffusion; and emphasizes the processes through which the entire world became interconnected resulting in a globalized world as we know it today.

This course seeks to provide students with the opportunity to pursue and ponder some of the substance behind the increasingly common rhetoric of globalization, global history, world history, international history, and the like. What do those terms mean? How can students find a foundation upon which to build a confident understanding of these concepts? This course uses cities to explore the common and dissimilar features of human history from the perspective of urban design over millennia, from ancient cultures to today. Cities consist of only five types of spaces--sacred, sovereign, commercial (or economic), residential, and public--that correspond to basic social and human needs. What changes over time, between cultures, and from city to city within a culture is the relative value assigned to each space. The course uses these five spaces to help students to appreciate how cities are assembled to reflect the relative historical and cultural importance of each space. Examining how different cultures in different times design and use such spaces provides students with the conceptual and analytical skills necessary to establishing a basis for appreciating globalization. This course also explores the importance of culture (broadly defined) in a historical context as a factor that gives distinctive shapes to common urban spaces. The design and structure of cities change over time and those changes reflect changing cultural, political, social, and economic values, and technology. We will examine one way of appreciating the importance of culture by looking at cases of colonial and cultural conquest. Allowing students to examine such changes enables them to appreciate the ways in which urban design reflects a society’s culture and history. Finally, this course explores the impact of economic and technological changes on urban design and urban life, with a particular focus on the impact of industrialization. This impact has also been global and, in fact, has had the single most powerful impact in the increasing homogenization of urban life. By providing students with the analytical tools and skills to appreciate the importance of these issues, this course enhances students’ critical skills, and their awareness of the common and culturally distinct aspect of human social organization. It also exposes them to a wider world (in the hope that they will explore it). Prerequisites: Although there are no formal prerequisites for this course, students are encouraged to have taken one or more courses on the history of Europe, Russia/Soviet Union, Latin America, or Asia, or a course in international urbanism. Given that the course moves routinely across time and space, having some foundation for understanding historical change or aspects of urban development is helpful.

Prerequisite(s): none. This course is offered at least once a year.

The University Honors College History of Sports course focuses on the emergence and evolution of sport during the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. It looks at the changing nature and meaning of sport, tackling why and how sport evolved from a community pastime to today’s corporate money ball, what sport has meant to people in different societies and epochs, and what roles race, gender, and the media have played in sport. It will also look at the global consequences of sport’s current model—that of global capitalism—on youth, play, and the meaning of sport. It will do so by looking at baseball academies in the Caribbean, football academies in Africa and Europe, junior hockey in Canada, and high school basketball and football in the United States and the South Pacific. The seminar format permits greater student involvement, research opportunities, and participation/discussion. The course asks you to address these questions and topics in seminar sessions as well as in writing about them. No prerequisites but come ready to explore.

1091 Global Health History

26958 Tu Th
11:00 AM-11:50 AM
0A224 LANGY

In the 21st century, many challenges to public health – including HIV/AIDS, dengue fever, SARS, malaria, “swine” flu, and Ebola – transcend national boundaries and trigger international responses. Public policy initiatives, non-profit organizations, governmental agencies, and grassroots movements all take aim at global epidemics and health inequalities, but they do so, often, based on widely diverging strategies and goals. Poor health and the prevalence of particular diseases dominate characterizations of the “global south,” the “Third World,” or “developing countries” in the media, shaping public policy, foreign aid, and wider assumptions about life, health, and human rights. By looking closely at selected episodes in the development of global health from the late 19th century to the present, this seminar will familiarize students with the history of global public health challenges and interventions. Students will gain a historical perspective on global public health, examining how and when particular diseases came to the attention of local communities and national governments. We will engage with the goals of public health, particularly ideas about eradication, vaccination, and prevention as they lead us to think about how people, environments, and causes of illness are understood and defined. We will question how and why emerging diseases were understood as “new” or “old,” placing international attention in the context of local experience. Over the course of the semester, we will focus our discussions on particular problems or events in health at specific moments in history, including: malaria at the turn of the century and in the 1950s; the 1918-19 influenza pandemic; smallpox vaccination and eradication efforts; the emergence of HIV/AIDS; the “new” tuberculosis; global health security; and emerging infectious diseases. We will explore the institutional development of international organizations and global health regimes as we study strategies of coping with disease and illness. Emphasizing the persistence of particular illnesses in human history, as well as continuities in treatment and disease prevention, we will take up sources and examples from Africa, Europe, the Americas, the Indian subcontinent, and East Asia.
The Center for Latin American Studies –Fall Course list--2016

2732     Power And Inequality Core Seminar
28801     Mo
1:00 03:25 PM
3701 WWPH

How have scholars approached the study of power and inequality? This seminar focuses on four distinct dimensions of power and inequality—class, race/ethnicity, gender, and global disparities—each of which has inspired wide-ranging academic debate on definitions, mechanisms, and the possibility of change. We will survey key scholar interventions generated by historians, sociologists, anthropologists, feminist theorists, critical geographers, and others, giving priority to the last two decades of theoretical debate and empirical investigation.

How are systematic patterns of inequality generated and sustained? What roles do cultural beliefs, social practice, political institutions, and macroeconomics play? How do different kinds of inequality—such as those around class, racism, ethnicity, and gender—interact? How do differently scaled systems of inequality—within the household, community, nation, and international system—interrelate?

Course readings are drawn from across a wide range of international research, and include multiple case studies from Latin America in particular.

What is modern art, and why does it matter? Participants in this course will develop answers to these questions by learning about key works of art from Europe, the United States, and Latin America. Recitations at the Carnegie Museum of Art will provide opportunities to look closely at paintings by Claude Monet, Mary Cassatt, and Jackson Pollock, among other artists. Lectures and readings will focus on the innovative approaches to painting, sculpture, photography, and collage that developed in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries in close relation to processes of political, economic, and social modernization. Students will gain knowledge of major historical conflicts, including the French and Mexican Revolutions, the U.S. and Spanish Civil Wars, and World Wars I and II. Close attention will be paid to how works of modern art circulate in exhibitions, the mass media, and the art market.

Prerequisite(s): none

This course is offered every term.

In fall 2016, this course will include sufficient coverage of Latin America to count toward the Certificate in Latin American Studies. Enrollment in a recitation section is required.

Students will have the unique opportunity to assist in the planning and implementation of an exhibition that will be held in the late fall in the Frick Fine Arts Building’s gallery space. In fall 2016, the exhibition will focus on how ephemeral and participatory artworks are exhibited, with an emphasis on efforts that emerged in Latin America during and after the 1960s. There will also be a general introduction to key concepts within museum studies and curatorial discourse so that students may gain a broad understanding of the many facets of successful exhibition planning, design and implementation. In addition to helping to organize and install the exhibition, students will be expected to participate in class discussions based on weekly readings, attend several required fieldtrips to local museums, and submit a final portfolio of materials created during the class. Beyond the usual course workload, this seminar requires a significant commitment of time outside of class, including team meetings, installation, and de-installation responsibilities. Principles of articulatory phonetics, with emphasis on the presentation of a standard framework for describing speech sounds. A bit of discussion also of acoustic and experimental phonetics. Practice in the production, recognition, and transcription of sounds occurring in various languages of the world. More briefly, an introduction to the principles and practice of phonemic analysis. Class time will be spent on lectures and drills, with occasional practice in analyzing data from speakers of different languages. Outside of class, each student will prepare a term paper analyzing the phonetic and superficial phonemic structure of some language previously unknown to him/her. This project will serve as an introduction to linguistic fieldwork as well as a training-ground for phonetic skills. This is a writing course.

Focusing on a variety of musical traditions throughout the world, this course addresses factors that have influenced historical and contemporary musical performance practices. Special attention is placed on how political, economic, social, and religious factors influence musical aesthetics and notions of identity among performers and audiences. Positioning music within a broader context of postcolonial, technological, and transnational development, this course analyzes the ever-changing relationship between traditional and modern socio-musical approaches toward performance techniques, musical transmission, and intercultural exchange.

Developing a new democracy is a process, with at least two main parts. First the country must move away from authoritarian rule. The first part of the course, therefore, will examine why (or why not) countries make that transition and how they do so. The second part of the course will then examine why some countries are more successful in their transition, based on an examination of civil society and the types of political institutions (such as political parties, the executive system, and the judiciary) that countries develop. What influences these choices and how do these choices affect success and stability of the new democracy? Has international aid been successful in helping countries develop democratic practices?

This course is an introduction to the methodology of social sciences. Its main purpose is to survey the major research designs and research techniques that are at the core of contemporary approaches used to study social phenomena. We will begin with the question of why and how we do social research. Then we will study the issues of research design, causation, and the systematic nature of data collection that leads to data that can be trusted. We will explore four research designs and methods: surveys, experiments, qualitative, and comparative-historical methods.

The primary goal of this course is to introduce students to the cultural histories of the Hispanic world, with a particular emphasis on Latin America. Through a multidisciplinary approach, we will study the interaction of social, political, ethnic, racial, and gender dynamics, and the resulting transformations in Latin America, past and present. After a study of pre-contact Iberian and Amerindian societies, we will critically examine the ensuing conflicts that characterized the three centuries of contested colonial rule in Latin America. We will then focus on the different national projects and revolutions that shaped the current geopolitical landscape through both cultural manifestations as well as discourses of national identity and calls for patriotic behavior. We will close with an overview of some of the challenges actors across Latin America face at the turn of the millennium. Throughout the semester, the goal will be both to learn about Latin America and about how it has been thought by its past and present scholars, tracing differences and continuities.

This upper level undergraduate course is a Senior Capstone Seminar for Spanish majors and represents the culmination of their undergraduate learning in the field of Spanish and Latin American literatures and cultures. The seminar is also intended to serve as a bridge between undergraduate and postgraduate study and as a professional training. Students will have the opportunity to systemize the knowledge of their major field by producing a 15-page research paper that demonstrates competency in literary analysis as well as evidence of critical thinking when dealing with complex cultural and theoretical issues. In this paper, students will develop an original approach to a literary text of their choosing. Approved drafts will be discussed in class, and final works will be presented in a public format at the Undergraduate Research Symposium, which this year will take place at the end of March. As part of their professional training, students will also work on the building of a CV, a job application letter, and a personal statement.

The goal of this seminar is to do an in-depth reading of indigenous critical thinking in the colonial Andes, focusing on the work of Guaman Poma de Ayala and Garcilaso de la Vega. It will be about examining creatively problems their texts pose still today, making sense of things that are ineludible but have been largely ignored. Some of the broader ideas this seminar invites pondering are: the ways in religion, race and knowledge intertwined in the 16th and early 17th centuries; the relations between Andeanism (“lo andino”), “el problema del indio”, and the colonial past; the impact of the Western dualist thinking both in the 16th century and today; the problem of the interplay of difference and similitude between Europeans and Indians, and their impact on colonial and contemporary agendas. In addition to Guaman Poma’s and Garcilaso’s work, course material will include 16th- and 17th-century colonialist texts, studies of cultural, social, and political dynamics in the colonial Andes, studies of Western colonialism and coloniality at large, and a couple of foundational theoretical works. Class discussion and assignments can be in either Spanish or English, but you must understand well both languages. Final papers can be about anything related to what is discussed during the semester; they do not have to be necessarily about colonialism or the Andes.

When Jacques Derrida wrote “the future belongs to the ghosts,” he confronted Western philosophy with the idea that no modern present has successfully exorcised its ghosts, and that any promise of a future must first confront the specters of the past. In this seminar, we will study the uncanny emergence of a Latin American Avant-garde that distancing itself from the historical “isms,” anticipated Derrida’s spectrology and, more importantly, challenged its conceptual framework. Gamaliel Churata’s work, especially his Resurrección de los muertos, as well the Titikaka avant-garde intervention will be crucial to critically debate the so-called spectral turn viz-à-viz a decolonial spectrology forged in the Andes in the age of the Avant-garde. Among required readings for this seminar are: Derrida’s The Specters of Marx, Freud’s The Uncanny, Bergland’s The National Uncanny: Indian Ghosts and American Subjects, Jameson’s The Political Unconscious, and The Spectralities Reader.

06:00 PM-08:30 PM recitation. Limit 50 207 LAWRN

This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an International perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of U.S. Drug Policy, which will be included. Finally, the various government tactics implemented to counter the threats mentioned herein as well as the impact on the private sector will be integrated into lectures throughout the program.

recitation  Limit 50  Andrew

Organized crime is no longer confined to a few countries such as Italy, the United States, and Japan. During the 1980s and 1990s it has become much more pervasive, and has had a major impact in countries such as Russia and other countries in transition, Turkey, Mexico, and South Africa. This course looks at the dynamics of organized crime, explains why it develops in particular countries, the various forms it takes, and the responses of law enforcement agencies and international institutions.

PIA 2460  Jorge

This seminar explores contemporary issues of social and public policy in Latin America through systems, glonacal, comparative, and case-study approaches. In the first section participants review general policy concepts and theories, to be followed by the historical, economic and political context of public and social policy in the region. The second section examines several policy areas such as education, employment, poverty alleviation, public administration, social security, health, minorities, and violence. Materials for the class include current news, scholarly publications, videos and other material published in English, Spanish, and possibly Portuguese. This seminar is an opportunity for students to engage in interdisciplinary deliberation on policy issues in this region and fulfills the requirements for certificates in Latin American studies.

2011  Managing International Organizations
24808  Mo
3:00.-5:55 P.M.
3431 Posvar Hall
This course, designed for students in all GSPIA masters programs, examines the challenges of management of international organization, that is, organizations that are comprised of states. It approaches management at three levels: at the macro level, we will explore the political environment and governance structures of international organizations; at the micro level, we will look at how individual managers cope with the standard management tasks, including managing staff and budgets, in an international environment, and at a meso level, we will study the challenges of project management and of inter-organization coordination. We will also look at cross-cutting issues, including the problem of corruption, the continued attempts to reform international organizations, and the relationships between management and policy in an international environment. Students will select a specific international organization for in-depth analysis. Students intending to apply this course to their certificate for CLAS must focus their work on Latin America/the Caribbean and submit their paper(s) to the Julian Asenjo, CLAS Advisor juasenjo@pitt.edu

3431 Posvar Hall

This course introduces the core concepts of human security, examines the institutions that promote them, and probes the advantages and limitations of human security as a means of addressing difficult policy issues. Human security treats individuals and communities, rather than states and institutions, as the fundamental units of analysis. It calls for an integration of individuals¿ security and integrity with state security and sovereignty. Analyzing security at the level of individuals instead of states raises important challenges and opportunities for observers and practitioners of development, conflict and peace human security, and investigate substantive policy agendas affecting human security on a range of global issues. We grapple with both direct and structural violence especially Among vulnerable populations, and with debates about prioritizing or narrowing human security threats and referents. And we explore how a diverse set of actors develop global public policy responses by articulating new policy agendas and defining policy recommendations. Throughout the term we assess the advantages and drawbacks of the human security.
For this course to count towards your certificate the work must be on Latin America.

This is a survey of development policies, issues, institutions, and resources for professionals working in development. Lectures, discussions, and presentations in class focus on analysis of development policies, and on new and significant policy issues, skills, methodologies, and resources. The course helps students develop the ability to analyze development issues from several perspectives, understand the breadth of international development as a field of professional service and academic study, and clarify their priorities for acquiring skills in preparation for that service. Students completing the course will be able to grasp the history of approaches and experiences with development, identify and critically analyze major institutions involved, assess political and institutional environments of development, employ some key social science and administrative tools, and recognize and understand principles of other significant skills and emerging methodologies in development practice. The course is organized in three parts: 1) dynamics of development and social change; 2) development management: who’s in charge?; and 3) contemporary issues and skills. Throughout the course we will introduce, discuss, and return to case studies that illuminate key issues and themes: the global hiv/aids pandemic, microfinance programs in development, the chad-cameroon oil pipeline project, water system privatization, and the global and local food prices and production.

2507  Human Rights: Politics and Practice
24073  M  Alfredson, Lisa
12:00 - 2:55 P.M.
3610 Posvar Hall

In this course students examine global human rights as an evolving social and political institution, analyze human rights violations and the challenges of human rights practice, and learn how serious threats to human security may be addressed. We examine key human rights concepts, theories and laws, and related controversies that often obstruct international action on human rights (e.g. origins and nature of rights, universality and cultural relativity claims, conflicting rights, state sovereignty, and notions of obligations and accountability). We then examine the field of international action for human rights (e.g., states, inter-governmental actors, non-governmental actors and civil society) and the core dimensions and challenges of human rights work. Throughout the course, human rights target groups (such as women, children, and refugees) and current topics (such as genocide, child soldiering, gender violence, and peacekeeping) are examined as case studies, illustrating key principles and challenges, and providing insight into the range and depth of current human rights and their practice across fields. Students also select a specific human rights topic for major assignments, including a human rights issue brief and a comparative case study of international action on human rights.

2510  Economics of Development
20047  W  Themudo, Nuno
3:00 – 5:55 P.M.
3415 Posvar Hall

The goal of this course is to enable you to theoretically understand and empirically analyze the economic problems of the lesser developed economy. You will become familiar with the core concepts in both macro and micro development economics (measuring development, economic growth, inequality, population pressure, international trade, international debt, development aid, poverty traps, rural and urban issues, technology, war and hunger, education, labor, land and credit market failures, government failure and corruption) and will learn an analytical framework to understand the problems of developing countries. Then, we will learn how to apply this analytical framework to real-world problems and questions through in-class case studies and to critically interpret the results of the empirical analyses within the framework of these in-class case studies. Finally, you will learn how to conduct analysis-based research independently, and to present the results of your analysis, as well as your recommendations, in a clear and concise manner to policy makers.

This course is for students who have already taken Spanish 0025 or the equivalent and wish to deepen their understanding of Spanish grammar. While the emphasis is on practical usage, theoretical aspects of the finer points of syntax will also be considered, including preterite/imperfect, ser/estar, indicative/subjunctive, etc. It is the intention of the instructor to run the class in a workshop type format rather than in a formal lecture style. In other words, students should complete their assignments before coming to class so that class time can be spent not only reviewing homework but also analyzing the concepts and applying them to translations, short writing tasks and other assignments. Because the text is written in Spanish, it may take a short period of adjustment to get used to understanding and using linguistic terms in Spanish. Students are expected to be able to conjugate verbs accurately in all tenses. The course will be taught entirely in Spanish.
