Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences foreign culture or non-Western culture requirement or other general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone 648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts, conferences, and the annual Latin American and Caribbean Festival. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas or call 412-648-7392 for a printed copy.

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only pre-requisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in Upper and Lower Case are international courses in which at least 25% of the content is Latin American. To have international courses count towards the certificate, focus your work on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master's level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s major. The primary academic department of the faculty member teaching the course determines how the course will be counted. Examples: A course taught by Prof. Barry Ames that is cross-listed in Political Science and GSPIA will be counted as a course in Political Science (the primary academic department of Prof. Ames) no matter if the student registers for the course under GSPIA or PS. A course taught by Prof. John Beverley that is cross-listed in Spanish, English Literature, and Cultural Studies will be counted as a course in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (the primary academic department of Prof. Beverley).

Faculty: Please contact Julian Asenjo (email juasenjo@pitt.edu or phone x8-7396) if your course contains at least 25% Latin American content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document.

Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website: www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

SCHOOL AND FACULTY OF ARTS AND SCIENCE--ARTSC
Study abroad programs are offered in many countries of the Caribbean, Mesoamerica, Central and South America. Students should contact the Study Abroad Office, 802 William Pitt Union, to arrange study programs of 3 to 18 credits. See the CLAS Academic Advisor to verify how credits will count towards completion of the certificate or related concentration in Latin American Studies.

The purpose of this course is to offer a wide survey of the anthropology (including archeology, history, and geography) of Latin America. It will emphasize changes of Latin America and Caribbean societies and cultures through time, and focus on key issues/themes that have consistently surfaced in Latin American cultural anthropology and continuing priority, relevance, and interest up to the present. Special attention is placed on historical, political, and economic contexts as a means of understanding contemporary cultural anthropological research in Latin America and Caribbean anthropology. This course is primarily tailored to students with little or no knowledge of, or experience in, Latin America and the Caribbean, will consist of lectures, readings, and films. Grades will be based on three non-cumulative, in-class exams, two written essays, and attendance.

This course is designed to introduce students to cultural anthropological methods and concepts that are useful for gaining a better understanding of human diversity. We will examine such topics as family systems, economic and political change, religion and ritual in order to encourage students to question commonly held assumptions about what is "normal" and "natural" in human experience. Films, videos and slide presentations will supplement texts and lectures. Evaluation of the recitation sections will be determined by the recitation instructor. Attendance, class participation, projects and short quizzes will form the basis of the recitation grade.

This course examines the origin and characteristics of urban life. After reviewing the nature of cities in the modern world, attention will focus on prehistoric cities in the Old World and New World, and the social, political, ecological and demographic processes that led to their development. The focus of the course is on archaeological cities, but ethnographic and sociological studies of modern urban forms will be extensively used. The purpose of the course is to give students a comparative understanding and appreciation of urban life and its long history.

This course will examine the art and architecture of complex New World civilizations in Mesoamerica (northern Mexico to Honduras) and Andean South America before European conquest. Our main goal will be to understand the relationship of the art to the ideology, cosmology, worldview and culture(s) of its creators. Themes to be explored include the relationship of the art to religion, the organization of power and the interaction between groups. Mesoamerican cultures to be studied include the Olmec, Maya, Teotihuacan, Zapotec, and Aztec. The ancient cultures of Andean South America -- Chavin, Paracas, Nazca, Moche, Wari, Tiwanaku, Chimú and Inca -- will also be examined.

Drawing on the fact that the ancient New World was a dazzling treasure house of non-western political thought and organization, this course uses archaeology and ethnohistory to document and make comparative sense of the rich variety of political arrangements which existed among prehispanic states in Mesoamerica and Andean South America. The following examples of ancient states are covered in the course: Aztec, Teotihuacan, Toltec, Zapotec, Mixtec, Classic Maya, Post Classic Maya, Moche, Wari, Tiwanaku, Chimú, and Inka. A special aim is to understand how Amerindian concepts about statecraft and rulership mesh with or diverge from anthropological and other theories about ancient and modern states.

Food is sustenance and absolutely essential to life. But food is never simply about nutrition. Because it is fundamental to the human experience, food is also a medium for the expression of culture and social identity. Moreover, food relays complex social messages about gender, sexuality, and family. Consequently, food is also a means of expressing the social and symbolic use of power and control in which social inequalities are expressed in culinary forms. This course will examine regional food cultures (such as the United States, China, Japan, Italy, Cuba, and Greece) as we consider food from the vantage point of gendered systems of production, distribution, and consumption as we consider questions such as: What is "fair trade" coffee; Why is it primarily women who receive chocolates on Valentine's Day; How did sushi "go global" and What do "real" men eat? This seminar examines popular sources, films, and anthropological and feminist studies of food, gender, and power as we explore the intersections of food and foodways, with themes such as sex and childbirth, identity, ritual, and globalization and sustainability.

1737 Special Topics In Cultural Anthropology: Language Ideologies: Languages, Speakers, Places, and Value
20024  Mo We 04:30 PM-05:45 PM 3301 Posvar Hall

“Language ideologies” describe the conceptualizations people have about languages, speakers, and discursive practices. This course examines the ways in which ideas about language are embed in everyday activity, pervaded with political and moral interests, and produced in relation to broad cultural settings. Drawing on recent work in anthropology, linguistics, and related fields, this course invites you to explore the nexus of language, culture, and politics. Students will be evaluated on the basis of: participation in class discussion (including discussion-leading), three short evaluative abstracts, a final paper proposal, and a final paper that examines a self-selected ethnographic, historical, or literary case study. No prerequisites required. This class is intended for advanced undergraduates and graduate students. All those attending should be willing to do work at that level.

Prerequisite(s): none. Check with the department on how often this course is offered. NOTE: Students taking this course for the Latin American certificate must concentrate their work on Latin America.

1750 Undergraduate Seminar: Prehistoric Village Life
23370  Tu Th 01:00 PM-02:15 PM 3301 Posvar Hall

Undergraduate Seminar. No social grouping other than the family has been more widespread, enduring, and important in human life than the village. Anthropologists have long recognized the village as an essential unit of study in understanding social organization in traditional, peasant, and modern societies. Archaeologists recognize the emergence of village life as an important threshold in societal evolution in many parts of the world. For much of human history, the village was the setting where people lived and interacted, where their perceptions and identities were formed, and where traditions and worldviews were perpetuated. This seminar will: (1) investigate the village cross-culturally as a characteristic type of human settlement, and (2) explore how village life was experienced by its members.

Topics to be explored include: the village as community; leadership, sharing, and jealousy within the village; demographic perspectives; the social transformations accompanying the origins of village life; the village as adaptation; and inter-village interaction and the growth of regional political systems. Drawing on ethnographic and archaeological case studies from Europe, the Middle East, China, and South America, we will aim at comprehending why villages emerged when and how they did in the past, and why the village remains so important to societies today, if only in some cases as a vanished ideal.

This course analyzes “antagonistic tolerance,” or contested sharing of religious sites. Worldwide, and widely throughout history, sacred sites have been shared, and sometimes contested, by members of different religious communities. Long periods of peaceful interaction and even religious syncretism may be punctuated by periods of violence, and the physical transformation of the shared sites. This course examines this dynamic by looking at case studies drawn from Europe (Bulgaria, Portugal, Turkey), Asia (India) and Latin America (the Inka Empire). The approach draws on both cultural anthropology and archeology, and some of the case studies are based on recent ethnography, others on ethnohistorical data, others still on archeological data. The cases have been developed in the course of a large-scale comparative research project by the instructor and an international team of scholars, and the course will work through their initial efforts at drawing conclusions from this ongoing project. The course will thus be an introduction to an ongoing, complex project in anthropology, including both archeology and cultural anthropology. Students will be encouraged to think about how the general model might be applicable in other world regions. Requirements: There will be a midterm examination and a seminar paper, the latter due at the end of the term. Since this is a new area of research, class attendance and participation are very important. No prerequisites: There are no formal pre-requisites, but students should have had some basic courses in anthropology (cultural and/or archeology), history, or other social sciences

Theories concerning a natural human diet, and the basis for food preferences and taboos, have long been the subject of controversy within both anthropology and the popular imagination. How do biological and cultural factors influence human food choice? In exploring this question, this course will examine the evolution of human diet from a nutritional and primate physiological perspective, and examine the symbolism of eating, consumption, and the nourished body in prehistory. Focal topics will include: current debates over hominid diets; the causes and consequences of the shift from hunting and gathering to food production; archaeological techniques for reconstructing subsistence and cooking patterns; and the development of ancient cuisines (including the Chinese, Sumerian, and Inca). In all cultures, cooking and eating are related to the definition of significant social roles. Therefore, we will investigate through case studies how food preparation spaces and gender division of labor in food preparation activities served to create domestic life in prehistory. This course takes a problem-oriented approach to the use of GIS (Geographic Information Systems) and related tools in archaeology. We will cover concepts, case studies, theoretical issues, and analytic techniques useful for addressing particular kinds of questions about the relationships among archaeological sites and between people and the land they inhabited. Topics include catchments and resource use, travel and transport over terrain, visibility, hydrology, locational modeling, and networks and spatial syntax. Students may choose to participate in an optional lab component on ESRI ArcGIS software or to work with Idrissi and AutoCAD. It is expected that students will have taken Archaeological Data Analysis II and be familiar with techniques for the acquisition and management of spatial data, the use of vector graphics, rasters (including map algebra), and spatial statistics. The course is intended to pair with ANTH 2541 (Regional Settlement, Communities, and Demography), and students are encouraged to take both courses simultaneously.

25392 Mo No Enroll Drennan, Robert
11:00 AM-01:55 PM recitation. Limit 20
3300 Posvar Hall

In the absence of modern communication and transportation technologies, human social communities were constituted in patterns of interaction primarily at local and regional scales. Prehistoric interaction patterns are usually strongly reflected in the way in which a human population distributed itself across a landscape. Thus a central reason for studying ancient settlement patterns is to delineate communities in the past and reconstruct the ways in which they structured interaction of various kinds at different scales. Such an approach leads not only to purely social interaction but also to political organization and the organization of the production and distribution of goods.

This seminar will focus on the social, political, and economic interpretation of regional-scale archaeological settlement patterns, once the patterns have been discerned through appropriate means of spatial analysis. All such interpretation rests finally on demographic reconstructions, so approaches to both relative and absolute demographic approximations at the regional scale will be considered in depth. Finally, having discussed these features of ancient human organization that settlement analysis can tell us about, we will consider how appropriate kinds of information to sustain such conclusions can be collected in the field. This seminar is designed to complement ANTH 2532: Advanced Topics in GIS. Students are encouraged to take both courses simultaneously. This course explores the transnational connections amongst different literatures, regions, and languages of the Americas, which came to be understood collectively with the 15th century European voyages as the "New World". We will raise such questions as: How does literature play a role in constructing people's visions of the world? What constitutes a literary tradition? In what traditions do the texts we read participate? How do those traditions overlap and differ? We will address these questions by reading several texts from the "New World," situating the texts with respect to one another, as well as to texts from the "Old World."

Modernism first flourished from about 1900 to 1945 in works by writers such as Conrad, Eliot, Joyce, Woolf, Pound, Stein, and Faulkner. Metropolitan modernist literature was influenced by rapid technological change, the increased visibility of war, interest in psychology and the irrational, and, most importantly, the changing relations between Britain and its colonies. We'll begin with a historical examination of the period, but Modernism is also understood as something formally new or experimental. The works are often difficult, emphasizing fragmentation, shifts in time and a self-conscious relation of present to past. Taking these cues, we'll examine the stakes in modernism's wish to tell a "new" story, and juxtapose its agenda to the realism against which it defines itself, thereby staging a dialogue between British and African, Caribbean, or Indian writers. We will also give some time to minority US writers.

This seminar will immerse students in several urgent current literary and cultural debates in the Caribbean, situating them in relation to a longer and wider history. What makes the Caribbean a literary “region,” and what futures have been imagined for it? How have Caribbean intellectuals framed the relationship of politics and aesthetics, and what forms of agency do they imagine? How have various Caribbean authors understood the relationship of the oral to the written word, Creole and Caribbean English to “Standard English?” This semester we will approach these questions with a particular focus on issues of gender and sexuality, as they impinge on such topics as nationalism, diaspora, everyday practices of resistance, and so on. Readings might include Lovelace, Rhys, Mootoo, Kempadoo, Collins, Powell, Danticat, Diaz, Kincaid, Glaves, along with a range of texts in Caribbean history, literary criticism, and cultural theory.

Rather, it will immerse students in several urgent current debates in the Caribbean (especially but not exclusively the Anglophone Caribbean), situating them in relation to a longer history. Central to the course will be the politics and aesthetics of gender and sexuality as they impinge on such topics as nationalism, diaspora, the use of Creole, intellectuals and radical political thought, everyday practices of resistance, and so on. Readings might include Rhys, Mootoo, Kempadoo, Collins, Powell, Danticat, Diaz, Kincaid, Glaves, along with a range of texts in Caribbean history, literary criticism, and cultural theory. This upper-division course entails the exploration of a fairly new sub-field within History of Science: the study of long-distance, transnational, inter-cultural circuits of scientists, texts, instruments, and discourses between approximately 1500 and the present. Focusing on scientific developments in the Americas, Asia, and Africa, this scholarship interrogates Eurocentric accounts of the history of knowledge. Students should expect to read and discuss the latest scholarship, as well as some seminal classics of the field.

Everybody talks about globalization but they do not all mean the same thing. By ‘globalization’ we mean growing global interconnectedness. Such interconnectedness is not new. It occurred to varying degrees through much of human history, but appears to be intensifying in recent decades. Usually historians write and read national histories and work within national boundaries. However, if global interconnectedness is indeed intensifying, scholars and students of history will have to learn to think globally or they will not be able to fully understand human affairs. We propose to introduce students to global thinking not by attempting an overview of world history, but analyzing three relatively recent developments: the political upheaval and student unrest of 1968, the global (?) economic crisis of the 1970’s, and the end of the Cold War after the breakdown of European socialism around 1990. We will pose overarching questions and then examine these events in four countries representing four world regions: Brazil (for Latin America), Japan (for Asia), Germany (for Europe), and the USA. We will look at similarities and differences among the four countries, and ask whether global processes explain the similarities and differences. This class is especially designed for students in History, UCIS and Global Studies but other students are equally welcome.

This course seeks to provide students with the opportunity to pursue and ponder some of the substance behind the increasingly common rhetoric of globalization, global history, world history, international history, and the like. What do those terms mean? How can students find a foundation upon which to build a confident understanding of these concepts? This course uses cities to explore the common and dissimilar features of human history over millennia, from ancient cultures to today. Cities consist of only five types of spaces—sacred, sovereign, commercial (or economic), residential, and public—that correspond to basic social and human needs. What changes over time, between cultures, and from city to city within a culture is the relative value assigned to each space. The course uses these five spaces to help students to appreciate how cities are assembled to reflect the relative historical and cultural importance of each space. Examining how different cultures in different times design and use such spaces provides students with the conceptual and analytical skills necessary to establishing a basis for appreciating globalization. This course also explores the importance of culture (broadly defined) in a historical context as a factor that gives distinctive shapes to common urban spaces. The design and structure of cities change over time and those changes reflect changing cultural, political, social, and economic values.

We will examine one way of appreciating the importance of culture by looking at cases of colonial and cultural conquest. Allowing students to examine such changes enables them to appreciate the ways in which urban design reflects a society’s culture and history. Finally, this course explores the impact of economic and technological changes on urban design and urban life, with a particular focus on the impact of industrialization. This impact has also been global and, in fact, has had the single most powerful impact in the increasing homogenization of urban life. By providing students with the analytical tools and skills to appreciate the importance of these issues, this course enhances students’ critical skills, and their awareness of the common and culturally distinct aspect of human social organization. It also exposes them to a wider world (in the hope that they will explore it). Prerequisites: Although there are no formal prerequisites for this course, students are encouraged to have taken one or more courses on the history of Europe, Russia/Soviet Union, Latin America, or Asia, or a course in international urbanism. Given that the course moves routinely across time and space, having some foundation for understanding historical change or aspects of urban development is helpful.

Nationalism became, in the last three decades, one of the major topics analysed by scholars in the field of cultural studies, history, literature, anthropology, political science and others in the last 30 years. This course tries to find a way through the masses of theories and explanations of nationalism by focusing on nationalist movements in the nineteenth and twentieth century, mostly in Europe and the Americas. While nationalism is an all-embracing cognitive and emotional set of values with an extremely strong impact on modern societies, nationalist movements are political groups much easier to distinguish.

This course examines the history of the Roman Catholic Church since 1492 in the Americas using various moments of internal crisis or external conflict as focal points for study. Topics include: missionary and military contact with New World indigenous populations after 1492, the minority situation of Catholics in the new United States, the Irish Famine and its consequences, conflicts between Catholic ethnicities, the impact of Catholic support for fascist regimes in the 1930s and 1940s, counter-cultural forms of Catholicism (conscientious objectors, civil rights activists, pacifists), Vatican II and its impact, liberation theology, Marxism and structural reform in Latin America, shifting theological positions on social and moral issues, and the current sexual abuse crisis. While the emphasis rests upon the social, economic and political dimensions of Catholic history, the course also addresses the aesthetic and cultural legacy of Catholicism including sacred architecture, music, and the arts, in elite and vernacular forms.

This course surveys the history of sport, focusing primarily on the twentieth century. Its emphasis is on the changing nature and meaning of sport. It tackles several questions, including why and how sport evolved from a community pastime to today's corporate money ball, what sport has meant to people in different societies and epochs, and what roles race, gender, and the media have played in sport. We will look at sport in settings that range from baseball in the Caribbean to basketball among the Crow on the reservations of Montana, as well as focus on the role of sport in Pittsburgh.

How do societies that have endured state terror deal with the memory of that collective trauma? In the twentieth-century Americas, this question has been relevant all too often. Large-scale violence by state agents or parastate actors has been used to silence political opposition and defend social and economic hierarchies in places like El Salvador and the Dominican Republic in the 1930s; Brazil and Argentina in the 1960s and 1970s; and Chile, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Haiti in the 1970s and 1980s. In each case the legacy of terror enforced a long silence, affecting not only individual survivors but the targeted communities as a whole. Only in later generations did activists, artists, and scholars begin to grapple openly with the memory of violence. What factors make state terror possible? And how do people memorialize and make sense of such “unspeakable” events? In this course, students will explore these questions by focusing intensively on three case studies, centered on the massacres of civilians in northern Chile, El Salvador, and the Haitian/Dominican borderlands. Within each case study, students will begin by analyzing professional historians’ descriptions of and explanations for the occurrence of state violence.

Then students will explore how these events were subsequently represented in genres including novels, films, oral traditions, video documentaries, music, and monuments. We will analyze how, when, and by whom these painful and conflictive histories have been remembered and commemorated. As we address these questions, we will also evaluate the ways that professional historians reconstruct and explain the past, and compare this to the ways that claims about past events are put forward, disputes, and used in public debate more broadly. Ultimately, then, this course reveals the creation of historical memory to be a multi-stranded and ongoing process, for individuals and groups can remember in public or in private; through words, gestures, or symbols; in political speeches, in fiction or art, in textbooks, in family lore. All of these are significant sites of historical memory, and all are shaped by politics, large and small.

1586 LATIN AMERICAN REVOLUTIONS

This course seeks to explain why social revolutions have taken place in Latin America. The objective is for students to gain a critical understanding of the origins, development, and future of revolutionary movements in the region. Concretely, we will try to identify: (1) the historical factors which have led to revolutions in the region (the so-called revolutionary situation); (2) the strategies followed by different movements and how successful they have been; (3) the programs and policies instituted by the different revolutionary governments; (4) the social and political forces which have opposed those policies, including the role(s) played by international forces; and (5) the 'outcomes' of these revolutionary movements. The course examines five case studies (Mexico, Cuba, Chile, Nicaragua, and the recent Zapatista uprising in Chiapas, Mexico), but keep in mind that our goal is to identify similarities and differences among these cases.

This course will examine historical patterns of race relations in the U.S., Latin America (Brazil, Cuba), Africa (South Africa), and Asia (India). For India, the focus will be more on caste relations, particularly untouchability, as a counterpoint to caste-like race relations in the U. S. and South Africa. The course will include pictures, videos and other materials acquired on trips to those locations in 1993, 1997 and 2002. The overall goal of the course will be comparative: to examine the operation of these processes in a variety of economic, political and cultural settings.

HIST 2721 links the four corners of the Atlantic in order to study the movement of peoples, cultures, politics, and ideas in the period 1500-1800. Our emphasis throughout will be on the working classes – craftsmen and women, apprentices, wage laborers, sailors, indentured servants, slaves, farmers, peasants, cottagers, villagers, domestics, and vagabonds, of both genders and of many races, ethnicities, and nationalities. We will study how the activation of these masses of people during the Atlantic’s “Age of Revolution” changed global politics in decisive, irreversible ways. We will seek to discover connections within the experiences and histories of working people, many of which have been either denied or ignored by historians. We will also explore various interpretations and paradigms of Atlantic history.

Political ideologies are systems of ideas that provide foundations and shape our attitudes and actions concerning the different aspects of the social and political organizations within which we develop our lives. These systems mix in different ways assumptions about human nature, the individual and society, with visions of the most desirable ways in which society should be organized and of the ways in which those ideal states should be pursued. Liberalism, socialism, and conservatism constitute the most major responses to the challenges and opportunities produced by the transit to modernity, and the political ideological traditions that to a greater extent have shaped the historical development of the last two centuries. This course has three main goals: 1) to make explicit and clarify the respective sets of assumptions about human nature, society and political authority, based on which liberalism, socialism and conservatism have developed as ideological traditions; 2) to present and discuss the ways in which each of them has provided both a critique and a proposal for the transformation of modern societies; 3) to provide the basis for a comparative critical assessment that can not only identify the differences between these ideological frameworks, but also the points where they eventually overlap.

This course is a reading seminar designed to introduce graduate students to the basic literature on political questions and problems in the Latin American context. The course will focus primarily on the question of how regime transitions (in the 1990s), and increasing methodological sophistication (over the last two decades) have triggered a change in the dominant paradigms for the studies of Latin America. The first part of this course deals with classic approaches to the study of Latin American politics: modernization theory, dependency, bureaucratic-authoritarianism, political culture, and macro-historical comparative strategies. The second part emphasizes the new agenda brought by the third wave of democratization: electoral behavior, political institutions, and governability. We will also explore the relationship between politics and economic reform, and institutions and policy outcomes.

This course offers a survey of Afro-Hispanic writing in the twentieth century (poetry, short stories, novel) in its national and historical contexts. Note that in addition to studying writers from the Hispanic Caribbean and South America, we will also be studying writers from Equatorial Guinea, the only location on continental Africa where the official language is Spanish. One of the foci of the course lies in deciding what constitutes the specificity or specificities of writing by Hispanic writers of African descent.

This course takes up the problem of "America" (in the broad, hemispheric sense), its shifting role in the geopolitical world-system, and its function as a trope in the representation of peripheral, marginal or excluded spaces and figures. Film is the formal medium through which we will explore these themes. Specifically, we will focus on four filmmakers whose narrative and visual mastery confronts the idea of America with the exceptionalism not of its triumphs, but of its failures. In a way, these very different artists--ranging in age from 45 to 70--are the storytellers of our time, the bards of late capitalist malaise. They include Alejandro Gonzalez Inarritu (Mexico), Werner Herzog (Germany), Errol Morris (US), and Lucrecia Martel (Argentina). The language of instruction will be English.

1405 SEMINAR: LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE & CULTURE

The impact of the literature on cinema and vice versa could be traced from the earliest Latin America productions. Canonic writers such as Gabriel García Márquez for instance, have played an important and active role in the development of different national cinemas. From Borges, Cortázar, Amado, Vargas Llosa, and Carpentier, and more recently Antonio Skármeta and Isabel Allende have seen many of their works in the screen, produced by numbers of filmmakers, including internationally renowned directors as Jean-Luc Godard, Antonio Bertolucci, and Michelangelo Antonioni. In this interdisciplinary course, students will be introduced to a selection of Latin American writers and to film analysis, emphasizing social and political issues. We will find connections and tensions between texts and films that will lead us to think film as a peculiar interpretation of texts. Students will participate in discussions and group activities, write analytical and critical essays, and give oral presentations. This course will be taught in Spanish.

1600 SURVEY OF SPANISH LITERATURE

The main goal of this course is to introduce students to Spanish literature and culture through the study of the representative works and authors of the Middle Age, the Golden Age, and eighteenth, nineteenth and twentieth centuries. The historical and cultural context of each period will be discussed, as well as different movements and literary genres. We will stress the interactions between literature and socio-political reality of Spain in order to read Spain through its own writings.

Prerequisite(s): none

This course is offered every fall and spring.

1707 AFRICAN PRESENCE IN LATIN AMERICAN LITERATURE AND CULTURE

The primary objective of this course is to provide students with a concrete frame of reference for people of African descent in Latin America. It also aims to foster an appreciation for the meaning, significance, and widespread influence of the African diaspora, by way of a general introduction to the human and cultural elements of African origin in the Spanish-, Portuguese-, and French-speaking countries in the region. Where necessary and/or appropriate, the course will compare and contrast the social and racial dynamic of the United States with these other countries in the hemisphere to foster an appreciation for the specificity and universality of the experiences of Latin Americans of African descent.

This course will address Latin American literary avant-gardes within the context of a critique of modernity that has changed the way we think about art, culture, and cultural production. Against conventional thinking, we’ll see that European “isms” do not capture the complexity of avant-garde production in Latin America, and that other, less well known avant-gardes, have similarly taken on the burden of cultural renovation even if their attacks on traditional cultural values and artistic institutions could be perceived as unacceptable from the point of view of artists and poets associated with canonical avant-gardes. Students will examine how recent scholarship is not only reframing our understanding of Latin American avant-gardes, but also expanding its field of action beyond traditional borders.

We’ll examine works by Arturo Borda, Jorge Luis Borges, Jorge Carrera Andrade, Gamaliel Churata, Oswald de Andrade Salomón de la Selva, Oliverio Girondo, Vicente Huidobro, José Carlos Mariátegui, Hugo Mayo, Gabriela Mistral, Pablo Neruda, Salvador Novo, Octavio Paz, Alejandro Peralta, Magda Portal, and César Vallejo, among others. Interdisciplinary in scope, the course will also look at works by Leonora Carrington, José Sabojal, Remedios Varo, and the Mexican muralism.

This graduate seminar, taught in Spanish, will involve extremely close readings of selected Borges texts, as well as the reading of his other (2700+) texts and selected criticism. The Borges works will be read in chronological order, with attention to the circumstances of their composition, using ideas from genetic criticism. Manuscripts and marginal annotations (Rosato and Alvarez’s book Borges, libros y lecturas, 2010) will be taken into account.

Students will be expected to do original research that takes into account existing Borges criticism but pursues new leads based on the materials that have become newly available. Readings: all of Borges’s works, including the works that have been collected posthumously, as well as criticism by Molloy, Sarlo, Balderston, Fishburn, Olea Franco, Waisman, Almeida, Parodi and others.

The pertinence of space and place is a major consideration in the analysis of Latin American Literature. This course offers an opportunity to consider this aspect from a philosophical, economic and environmental perspective. We will read theorists such as Bachelard, Heidegger, Foucault, Angé, Soja, Harvey, Guattari, Massey, Buell, Escobar, Lefebvre. Concepts such as landscape, endangered territories, exploitation and toxic discourse in realistic and contemporary jungles will be our quest. Re-readings of Rivera, Gallegos, Asturias, Uribe Piedrahita, Zeno Gandía, Laguerre, and readings of Sánchez, Sepúlveda, Payeras, Eltit, Piglia, Lalo, Santa Cruz, Bellatin, Montijo and Ferré will bring to the fore many interrelationships.

This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an International perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of U.S. Drug Policy, which will be included. Finally, the various government tactics implemented to counter the threats mentioned herein as well as the impact on the private sector will be integrated into lectures throughout the program.

3207 Education Sector Analysis
24760  Th  Weidman, John
04:30 PM-07:10 PM
4322 Posvar Hall
The purpose of this course is to introduce students to analytical tools and examples of comprehensive research on the education sector. Sector analysis plays an essential role in educational policy making, in helping governments and international organizations to judge the progress of education development in a country, in identifying bottlenecks, and in choosing among alternative policies and investment strategies. The context of education for developing countries is changing rapidly due to globalization pressures, constrained budgets, persistent poverty and the need to improve the quality of education outcomes in a competitive world. In this fast-changing economic, social, cultural and political environment, analytical education sector research is essential for the development of sound educational policies.

Specific education sector work will be discussed and analyzed by students with the contribution and occasional participation of professors and specialists of the field invited as guest speakers. Students are encouraged to choose countries for their own sector analysis from any region of the world in which they are interested. However, students seeking credit for UCIS Area Studies Programs must choose a country in the particular program’s geographical area. Examples of project identification, design, and project evaluations in which the instructor has been involved will also be examined and discussed. NOTE: Students taking this course for the Latin American certificate must concentrate their work on Latin America.

"Emergencies and disasters create an extraordinarily difficult set of challenges for public managers. In disaster, public managers are legally responsible for the protection of life, property and continuity of operations in their respective communities. Yet, they are suddenly confronted with situations they may have never seen before. How do they assess the situation? How do they formulate a strategy of action to bring the situation under control? What information do citizens need to protect their own lives and property? How do managers of nonprofit and private organizations make informed decisions under the urgent stress of disaster, when lives and property are at risk? As the world’s population increases, the incidence of disasters, both natural and man-made, also increases as people move into vulnerable coastal regions and amassed in megacities.

This course will examine the conditions that confront public, private, and nonprofit managers in communities exposed to risk from natural, technological, and deliberate disasters. It will review the current organizational plans for assessing risk, and examine the requirements for enabling communities to reduce their exposure to risk. This course meets a requirement for the school-wide minor in Civil Security and Disaster Management."

In this graduate course the process of development is examined from both theoretical and pragmatic policy perspectives, taking account macro-level nation-building as well as the micro-level implementation of development projects. Development theory is examined in terms of conflicting goal analysis from economic, social, political, anthropological, and moral frameworks. The micro-level is then approached in terms of project implementation (goal achievement) as well as with regard to more process-oriented, dynamic measurement tools. This course prepares students for appreciating the challenges of the development process from a broad, macro-level perspective, enabling students to draw up broad development plans and to understand the likely consequences of such plans in particular world regions and nation-states.
PIA—PUBLIC & INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS—(Con’t)
At the same time, students in become more adept at analyzing individual development projects from multiple analytic approaches, which better prepares them for the challenges of grassroots-level decision-making as professional development specialists ‘in the field.’ The course is organized into three parts: Part 1, “Understanding Development,” focuses on analyzing development goals, economic development processes, poverty reduction strategies, political development, and civil society. Part 2, “Doing Development,” concerns development aid, NGO behavior, evaluating projects, decentralization, ecology, and human and gender rights. Part 3, “Personalizing Development,” is devoted to student presentations of final projects. The course grade is based on two in-class exams, one in-class presentation, a final development project report, and class participation. Religious ideas, belief, and institutions are part of virtually every setting in which development practitioners work. This course will involve students actively in understanding the roles of religion in social and economic change, the variety of experiences with religious institutions and movements in poor societies, and the significance of religion in a number of key policy areas. We will approach religion from multiple perspectives, reading and critiquing economic, sociological and anthropological analyses. Readings focus primarily on three religious traditions (christianity, islam and buddhism), but research and presentations on other traditions is encouraged. We will explore the significance of culture and religious beliefs and institutions in local and global development, covering four broad topics: cultural factors in local and national development; religious traditions and the ethics and practice of development; the nature and significance of faith-based institutions in global affairs; and the relevance of religion in several key policy areas, including environment, human rights, democracy, conflict resolution, and social movements. This course will be of interest to students interested in community development, ethics, culture, and (of course) religion. Students will be able to focus on a region or country of interest. For this course to count towards your certificate the work must be on Latin America.

The core course provides an overview of the social and behavioral sciences and their importance in the inter-disciplinary field of public health. A primary emphasis is on the social-ecological model, its application to public health issues, and its use in the development of policies, strategies, interventions and programs. The course content will introduce students to several relevant social and behavioral theories as well as a range of community health assessment and planning models used by public health professionals in both domestic and international venues. Through a series of assigned readings, discussion exercises, group projects, quizzes and written assignments, students will enhance their knowledge and awareness of the role of social and behavioral sciences in public health and its relevance to their specific discipline. At the conclusion of the course students will be able to: identify the important social and behavioral determinants of health; describe the inter-relationships between the social, behavioral, bio-medical, physiological, and environmental factors related to individual and community health; identify the major health disparities related to social, behavioral and economic factors; describe the role of culture and socio-economic status in health behavior, access to services, and decision-making; and understand the importance of community partnerships and participatory approaches in the development, implementation, management and evaluation of community policies and programs.
