

The Center for Latin American Studies (CLAS)

presents

PANORAMAS

LATIN AMERICAN ROUNDTABLE

Small Countries, Big Challenges: Addressing Poverty and Vulnerability in the Caribbean

by

Asha Williams

(Social Protection Specialist, World Bank; CLAS and Pitt alumna; and 2015 Recipient of the Sheth International Young Alumni Achievement Award)

Thursday, March 19, 2015

Noon

4130 Posvar Hall

Despite their small size and picturesque locations, many Caribbean countries have been grappling with development challenges, including vulnerability to natural disasters and climate change; susceptibility to exogenous shocks; limited productive sectors; and small labor markets. These challenges, along with demographic changes in several countries, have implications for poverty and vulnerability among households and individuals and, by extension, the needs of citizens for Social Protection and Labor policies and programs.

To address some of these challenges, Caribbean countries have employed Social Protection Labor programs and policies, including social assistance, social insurance, and labor market programs. This presentation will provide an overview of the role of Social Protection in the small country context (particularly the Caribbean) and examine how Social Protection and Labor programs can be tailored to the small country context. The presentation builds on a recent World Bank Social Protection and Labor Discussion Paper, Tailoring Social Protection to Small Island Developing States: Lessons Learned from the Caribbean.

Link to Discussion Paper:

Williams, A.; Cheston, T.; Coudouel, A.; and Subran, L. (2013). Tailoring Social Protection to Small Island Developing States: Lessons Learned from the Caribbean. (World Bank) <http://siteresources.worldbank.org/SOCIALPROTECTION/Resources/SP-Discussion-papers/Social-Protection-General-DP/1306.pdf>

Lunch will be provided.

For updates, visit: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/panoramas_roundtable

For more information, contact: Luis Bravo bravo@pitt.edu or Luz Amanda Hank lavst12@pitt.edu

The Center for Latin American Studies (CLAS)

presents

PANORAMAS

LATIN AMERICAN ROUNDTABLE

Small Countries, Big Challenges: Addressing Poverty and Vulnerability in the Caribbean

by

Asha Williams

(Social Protection Specialist, World Bank; CLAS and Pitt alumna and 2015 Recipient of the Sheth International Young Alumni Achievement Award)

Thursday, March 19, 2015

Noon

4130 Posvar Hall

Despite their small size and picturesque locations, many Caribbean countries have been grappling with development challenges, including vulnerability to natural disasters and climate change; susceptibility to exogenous shocks; limited productive sectors; and small labor markets. These challenges, along with demographic changes in several countries, have implications for poverty and vulnerability among households and individuals, and by extension, the needs of citizens for Social Protection and Labor policies and programs.

To address some of these challenges, Caribbean countries have employed Social Protection Labor programs and policies, including social assistance, social insurance, and labor market programs. This presentation will provide an overview of the role of Social Protection in the small country context, particularly the Caribbean, and examine how Social Protection and Labor programs can be tailored to the small country context. The presentation builds on a recent World Bank Social Protection and Labor Discussion Paper, Tailoring Social Protection to Small Island Developing States – Lessons Learned from the Caribbean.

Link to Discussion Paper:

Williams, A.; Cheston, T.; Coudouel, A.; and Subran, L. (2013). Tailoring Social Protection to Small Island Developing States: Lessons Learned from the Caribbean. (World Bank) <http://siteresources.worldbank.org/SOCIALPROTECTION/Resources/SP-Discussion-papers/Social-Protection-General-DP/1306.pdf>

Lunch will be provided.

For updates visit: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/panoramas_roundtable

For more information contact: Luis Bravo bravo@pitt.edu or Luz Amanda Hank lavst12@pitt.edu