Students are encouraged to enroll in courses on Latin America/the Caribbean or to participate in the programs of Latin American Studies—Related Concentration, Undergraduate or Graduate Certificate. Many of the undergraduate courses on this list may be used to satisfy the School of Arts and Sciences general education requirements. Need advice concerning registration or want information about the certificates or related concentration? Please contact Luis Van Fossen Bravo (email bravo@pitt.edu or phone 412-648-7396).

Students also are welcome to attend CLAS events—lectures, films, workshops, concerts, conferences and the annual Latin American and Caribbean Festival. See the monthly schedule of activities on the CLAS website: http://www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas

Important Information for Students and Advisors

Program Registration: To be officially enrolled in the CLAS certificate program, students must complete an application for admission to CLAS. Admissions are done on a rolling basis. The only prerequisite is interest in Latin American related topics. There are no deadlines, nor is there an application fee. However, the sooner a student enrolls, the sooner they may be eligible for awards, grants, and fellowships from CLAS.

Acceptable Certificate Courses: Courses in this list with titles typed in ALL CAPS are accepted to fulfill Latin American Studies area course requirements. Courses with titles typed in upper and lower case are international courses in which at least 25% of the content is Latin American. To have international courses count towards the certificate, focus your work on Latin America. (If the professor requires a paper or papers, bibliography, readings, etc., you must do all the work on a Latin American topic. You will be asked to present your work for the course to the CLAS academic advisor.)

Other Courses: Students may, with the permission of the CLAS advisor, register for a course with international content, a directed study, independent study or readings course taught by a CLAS faculty member. These courses will count towards the certificate/related concentration only if the student focuses specifically on a Latin American topic for the course.

University of Pittsburgh Course Numbers

Courses numbered from:
- 0001 to 0999 are lower level undergraduate courses; they are not acceptable for graduate credit.
- 1000 to 1999 are upper level undergraduate courses; they are acceptable for both undergraduate and graduate certificates.
- 2000 to 2999 are master’s level courses and those in the 3000s are doctoral level courses.

All Latin American courses for the certificate or related concentration will be counted as “inside” or “outside” the student’s other credentials.

Faculty: Please contact Luis Van Fossen Bravo (email bravo@pitt.edu or phone 412-648-7396 if your course contains 25% Latin American, Caribbean, or Latinx/Diaspora content and is missing from this list or if the information given about your course is incorrect. Revisions to this list are made as soon as corrections are received.
SCHEDULE OF LATIN AMERICAN AREA STUDIES COURSES
SPRING TERM (JANUARY 19 – MAY 1, 2021)

All courses are three credits unless otherwise indicated. Area courses are listed first and then their descriptions. A list of the Spanish/Portuguese language courses is found at the end of the document.

Note: the information on this course list is subject to change. Updates are available on the CLAS website: www.ucis.pitt.edu/clas/students.html

When Cortez and his Spanish soldiers arrived in Mexico, they found Indians living in large cities with impressive temples raised on tall pyramids, lavish palaces for rulers, elaborate markets, and skilled craftsmen working in gold, copper, feathers, stone, pottery, and other materials. They were astonished at a civilization so like their own and yet so different (so "barbaric" to European eyes). This course explores the development of this civilization back to its roots several thousand years ago, by reconstructing earlier cultures known only from archeological evidence.

Undergraduate Seminar. This course examines the origin and characteristics of urban life. After reviewing the nature of cities in the modern world, attention will focus on prehistoric cities in the Old World and New World, and the social, political, ecological and demographic processes that led to their development. The focus of the course is on archaeological cities, but ethnographic and sociological studies of modern urban forms will be extensively used. The purpose of the course is to give students a comparative understanding and appreciation of urban life and its long history.

This seminar will explore the formative role that enslavement, captivity, and unfreedom have played in the long-term development of human societies from prehistory to the modern era. Utilizing a comparative approach that draws on numerous case-studies from various global slave trades, we will examine both theoretical and practical approaches to the study of unfree groups in the archaeological and historical records. The topics covered in each session are intended to be broad, allowing participants to pursue and develop avenues of investigation and discussion that are of most interest to them. The seminar will meet on selected Fridays approximately once a month, with sessions divided between those dedicated to the discussion of broad but nevertheless significant theoretical questions and those in which we will present and examine a wide-range of case studies. Given the difficulties associated with the archaeological study of unfree groups, participants are encouraged to engage not only with material culture but also historical, literary, and ethnographic data. ANTH 2537 is the second half of a two-term course; nevertheless, prior enrollment in the fall term is not required for enrollment in the spring term.

Delgado, Jorge
The interest in studying policy in Latin America and the Caribbean (LAC) has grown in recent decades. Public policy refers to the principles and decisions that guide government actions. Social policy, as a component of public policy, focuses on strategies and programs to guarantee and provide protections for the most vulnerable groups in a society with the goal of achieving equality and equity. Policies are influenced and determined by contextual factors such as international trends, the social fabric, political structures, legal systems, interest groups, and particular situations. This lecture explores public and social policy issues in LAC from three fronts/parts: the region as a unit of study, individual countries, and policy topics.

The class focuses on short stories in two contexts. First, that of the lives of major writers and filmmakers from different cultures including Argentina, Canada, France, Russia, and the US. We use the events of their lives and especially their thinking on sexuality to shape our reading of a) the stories they write and b) two films, Arrival (a science fiction film/adaptation on translation) and Lost in Translation (a movie focusing on the relationship between a young woman and an older man, each confronting a difficult marriage). Second, we read the stories by Maupassant, Borges, and Chekhov as Literature of the Americas introduces students to important issues in the study of literature and culture by focusing on colonial and postcolonial traditions in regions of the Americas beyond the United States. Beginning with the European "discovery" of the "new world", it examines comparatively literary and other texts from Britain, the West coast of Africa, the US, Canada, the Caribbean and Latin America, tracing the emergence of distinctive literary traditions and preoccupations of the Americas through to significant modern incarnations.

EngLit 625 is a course focused on detective fiction understood in the broad sense as fiction whose protagonist engages in the search for truth in the realm of deviant behavior, often but not always murder. The class examines detective fiction in terms of its history, its social meaning, and as a form of philosophizing. It also seeks to reveal the place and values of popular fiction in our lives. The course gives special attention to the psychology of gender, in both its study of the female sleuth, Stephanie Delacour, and of the female authors of detective fiction, including both Julia Kristeva and Agatha Christie.

The course reads world literature focusing on the nature of the human in the context of different national identities, including, beginning with the most recent, Italian, French, American (US), English, and Argentinian examples. We will also examine two films adapting detective fiction to the screen, Alberto Sironi’s According to Protocol and Robert Florey’s Murders in the Rue Morgue. Credits: English Minor; English Literature; and the Certificates in Gender, Sexuality, and Women's Studies as well as in Latin America.

Spain underwent a series of radical transformations in the period from about 1200-1700 CE. The peninsula was first the center of Muslim empire that controlled much of the Mediterranean. This gave way to a Catholic empire that then expanded across the Atlantic Ocean to encompass most of the New World. This class will examine the art produced in Spain and Spanish realms in this period. The succession of various empires and comingling of different faith traditions gave rise to some of the most unique artistic expressions at the time. This course will examine works produced by some major artists in Spain. However, we will also look at how the concept of 'the artist' evolved in Spain during the period in question. This we be supplemented by looking at how local modes of artistic production developed in the New World as well as what became of the vibrant tradition of Jewish art and architecture following the expulsion of the Jewish population in 1492. This class will help us understand how European art colonized not only the New World, but also the Iberian Peninsula itself.

Across the Americas between the 1920s-70s, from Buenos Aires to Havana to Los Angeles, exchanges between artists, graphic designers, and writers catalyzed the emergence of significant avant-garde movements, as participants combined text and image on the printed page to engage in transnational dialogues with their peers in other cosmopolitan centers. The aim of this seminar, to be taught in parallel with a graduate seminar offered by Prof. Daniel Balderston in Hispanic Languages and Literatures (HLL), is to bring graduate students from across departments together in an interdisciplinary analysis of books and journals ranging from Pau Brasil to El corno emplumado to La raza. Working together across disciplines and languages (English, Spanish, and Portuguese), we will draw greater meaning and resonances from the juxtapositions of image and text in these key sources than would be the case in isolation.

This course is an introductory survey of world history starting from the human global migration out of Africa and up to the current global age. The course presents developments that impacted on humanity as a whole, such as climate changes, environmental issues, and plagues; patterns of development recurrent in different places of the world, including the emergence of agriculture, cities, and states; processes that brought different societies in contact, for example trade, migration, conquest, and cultural diffusion; and emphasizes the processes through which the entire world became interconnected resulting in a globalized world as we know it today.

This course surveys the history of sport, focusing primarily on the twentieth and twenty-first centuries. Its emphasis is on the changing nature and meaning of sport. It tackles several questions, including why and how sport evolved from a community pastime to today's corporate money ball, what sport has meant to people in different societies and epochs, and what roles race, gender, and the media have played in sport. We will look at sport in settings that range from baseball in the Caribbean to football in American Samoa, and rugby in South Africa, as well as focus on the role of sport in Pittsburgh.

This course examines the origins, course, and consequences of Latin America's three major social revolutions of the twentieth century. It begins with the Mexican Revolution (1910-40), focusing on the key role peasants played in promoting revolutionary change. The course then considers the socialist project of the Cuban Revolution (1959-). It concludes with Nicaragua's Sandinista Revolution (1979-90), the first revolution to freely give up power at the polls, in order to consider the complicated relationship between revolution and democracy.

This course will analyze the forces shaping population movements between Latin America and the United States and how these have evolved over time. We will explore how Latino immigrants have integrated, resisted, and adapted to the forces impacting their lives in the United States over the last century and a half, creating new ethnic, racial, and regional identities in the process. We uncover the varied experiences of Latinos and Latin American immigrants with racism and discrimination, identity formation, community building, work and labor struggles, and social mobility as we map out the heterogeneous mosaic of Latin American and Caribbean diasporas in the United States.

This course will examine historical patterns of race relations in the U.S., Latin America (Brazil, Cuba), Africa (South Africa), and Asia (India). For India, the focus will be more on caste relations, particularly untouchability, as a counterpoint to caste-like race relations in the U.S. and South Africa. The course will include pictures, videos and other materials acquired on trips to those locations in 1993, 1997 and 2002. The overall goal of the course will be comparative: to examine the operation of these processes in a variety of economic, political and cultural settings.

Migration has been a main feature throughout human history. The recent arrival of hundreds of thousands of refugees from the Middle East and Africa in the European Union, and the discussions on the treatment of thousands of people fleeing violence and poverty in Central and South America on the US-Mexican border are only the latest examples of its enduring occurrence. The main emphasis of the course will be on the movement of people, with a regional focus on Europe and with strong comparative views on Asia and the Americas. We will look into changing mobility patterns of the nineteenth and twentieth centuries, and how such changes transformed ways of migration and migrants’ identities. Another emphasis will be on the development of the modern state border as an emerging obstacle for migrations and the closely related discussions on inclusion and exclusion. While the course is historical in scope, we will compare past processes with more recent occurrences of migration and the related debates on the issue.

Phonology is the study of how sounds pattern in the languages of the world. Using this definition, students will try to understand what exactly people are doing when they study phonology. The course will be divided up into two main sections: In the first section, students will learn about the main concepts and analysis techniques that have traditionally formed the backbone of phonology. The focus will be on how to perform a formal phonological analysis and make a phonological argument. In the second section of the course, the focus will shift toward understanding how and why the field of phonology has evolved over time, in terms of both its subject matter and its methods. Students will work through some of the seminal texts in phonological theory and try to understand what each theory does well versus poorly. This course will help students to become better, more critical thinkers and writers. Must submit work to academic advisor in order to count for the certificate.

Class members will explore the sounds and meanings of musics across a broad scope of Brazilian life. The musics covered span from eighteenth-century calundu to twenty first-century hip-hop, from tropicália to the manguebeat movement, and the choro of Chiquinha Gonzaga to the forró of Luiz Gonzaga. Class members will analyze articles, texts, and films, and participate in critical listening and discussion to gain insight into the sounds of Brazil and the various meanings of being Brazilian.

Comparative Politics is the field within political science charged with the study of domestic politics. Its main goal is to systematically compare political units--mainly countries--in order to make statements about the factors that explain how politics works. The comparative method allows us to address questions such as why some countries establish democratic institutions while others are ruled by autocrats or how the choice of electoral system modulates the capacity of citizens to discipline incumbent politicians. This course will cover the following topics: political regimes, transitions to democracy, institutional choices within democratic regimes, social cleavages and ethnic identities, corruption, electoral accountability, and the economic consequences of institutional designs. The discussion of each of these topics will be structured around specific questions that comparative politics can illuminate. Must submit work to academic advisor in order to count for the certificate.

Developing a new democracy is a process, with at least two main parts. First the country must move away from authoritarian rule. The first part of the course, therefore, will examine why (or why not) countries make that transition and how they do so. The second part of the course will then examine why some countries are more successful in their transition, based on an examination of civil society and the types of political institutions (such as political parties, the executive system, and the judiciary) that countries develop. What influences these choices and how do these choices affect success and stability of the new democracy? Has international aid been successful in helping countries develop democratic practices?

This is a topics course in international relations focusing on the politics of human security. The politics of human security is an area of evolving interest within the field of international relations. Currently, few political science departments offer courses on the topic and there is little agreement on what should be included in such a course. The general consensus is that 'human security' differs from 'national security' in that the latter is concerned with the well-being of the state, while the former is concerned with the well-being of individuals. In this course, we will focus on how violence, political oppression, poverty, and ecological destruction threaten individual welfare and what the international community is (and is not) doing to address these concerns. Must submit work to academic advisor in order to count for the certificate.

his course aims to introduce students in how to look at the fundamentals of sociology and societies. In particular, we will explore how people organize their social life, how cultures and subcultures vary, how social institutions vary, and what problems are central and fundamental in the daily lives of ordinary people. By doing this, we will be better able to do a critical and reflexive analysis on whether or not we, as a society, are concerned about the things that are most critical to our collective and individual well-being. NOTE: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America, Caribbean and/or Latinx/Caribbean Diaspora.

What is literature? What does the literary do? This course, conducted in Spanish, is designed to introduce students to the study of Hispanic literature, while the same time dealing with concepts which can be applied to all literature. We will analyze Hispanic literature understood in its broadest sense, touching upon significant works, genres, movements, and authors from Spain and Latin America, all of which will have either health-related themes or relevance to the field of narrative medicine. More than a survey course, however, this course is designed to teach students how to read literature, how to write about it, and why it matters. In partial answer to this question, this course is an introduction to the health humanities and narrative medicine in Spanish. Students will learn how narrative is central to empathy, to cultural competence, to the expression and processing of pain, sickness, and healing, and how developing the skills to interpret narratives and interact with them is key to promoting global health.

The primary goal of this course is to introduce students to the cultural histories of the Hispanic world, with a particular emphasis on Latin America. Through a multidisciplinary approach, we will study the interaction of social, political, ethnic, racial, and gender dynamics, and the resulting transformations in Latin America, past and present. After a study of pre-contact Iberian and Amerindian societies, we will critically examine the ensuing conflicts that characterized the three centuries of contested colonial rule in Latin America. We will then focus on the different national projects and revolutions that shaped the current geopolitical landscape through both cultural manifestations as well as discourses of national identity and calls for patriotic behavior. We will close with an overview of some of the challenges actors across Latin America face at the turn of the millennium. Throughout the semester, the goal will be both to learn about Latin America and about how it has been imagined by its most influential past and present thinkers, tracing differences and continuities. Updated 10/01/2019.

Pre Requisite(s): [SPAN 0020 or 0120] and [SPAN 0025 or 0125] (Min Grade 'C' for all listed courses)

This course provides a panoramic view of Latin American Literature from the colonial period to the present. It is designed to (1) introduce Spanish majors to Latin American literary traditions in a variety of literary genres, and (2) develop students’ reading, analytical and critical writing skills through a series of assignments. Organized as both a chronological and thematic survey, the class emphasizes cultural, social and political aspects of literary production. It will begin with the Cronistas de Indias and will read excerpts from the Baroque, Modernism, Realism, Naturalism, Vanguardism, The Boom and Post Boom authors.

This course explores the complex, multi-layered, and often contradictory world of transnational narcotics traffic particularly as it is configured in and through contemporary Latin American cinema. Departing from the contention that the relations between drug trafficking networks, governmental responses to the drug trade, drug production and consumption, are not clear and transparent as depicted in dominant discourses exemplified by the narrative of the War on Drugs, this course analyzes narco-culture not as a simplistic response centered merely on the idolization of drug lords or drug culture, but as a dynamic creative current that tries to make sense of the complexity and violence of the world of drugs. Why do official narratives of capitalist enterprise disavow the capitalist foundation of the drug trade? How are discourses of security and protection ironically embodied in violent militarized actions and neo-imperial ventures? How does the criminalization of certain cultural practices and symbols - particular languages, dress codes, music - relate to the racialization and sexualization of certain peoples and bodies? Moreover, how can we understand the (global) commercial success of narco-culture as exemplified by recent mainstream media and popular culture? In this course, we will address these questions by engaging in close reading/viewing of contemporary Latin American films that center on representations and (re)productions of narco-culture. These primary works will be examined in conjunction with secondary readings that discuss topics relevant to our analysis of narco-culture, such as globalizaion, neoliberal capitalism, immigration, femicides, cultural appropriation, and racial and gender construction.

Concentrating on what is bilingualism, and after reviewing its historical and cultural parameters in Latin America, we will study the violent encounter between the Indigenous languages and the languages brought by the Conquistadores (Spanish, English, French, Portuguese), and its impact on the formation of the nation, class relations, race and language. This will be a non-chronological account of the cultural and linguistic genocides, encounters, shocks and invasions from the times of La Malinche, Sor Juana, and other authors to Latino Writing Today. Theories of Francine Massiello, Doris Sommer, and Juan Flores will be examined, as well as authors such as Sylvia Molloy, Octavio Paz, Esmeralda Santiago, Luis Rafael Sánchez, Guillermo Gómez Peña, Pedro Pietri, Dolores Prida Gloria Anzaldúa, and Lhasa di Sela, among others. We will explore questions regarding bilingualism, language and nation formation, translation studies, border studies, and minority writing. Discussion on the importance of bilingualism in a globalized world, as well as issues conforming publication and expectations on Latino writing will also be addressed.

Indios Chinos, Inca Witches, African Healers, Crypto Jewish, and Old Christians: Racial, Ethnic and Religious Difference in Colonial Latin America. Diversity has been a constant of human societies, and so have been the different ways in which people have made sense of it. Colonial Latin America was no exception. After 1492 Indigenous Latin American polities progressively went from independent entities to subordinated units of the Portuguese and Spanish Empires, and large numbers of African and Asian peoples were uprooted and transported to Latin America. During this long, protracted process of transformation Western ideas about difference were put to the test and gave birth to unexpected questions. Was it the stars that made people different? Or was it that the sun was stronger in the tropics? Perhaps it was the mother's imagination, or the Devil messing with it? Were all people descendants of the same act of creation or had there been many? Were the varying degrees of masculinity at the roots of it all? And anyway, how fundamental were the differences? Could skin color be rubbed off? Was the soul the same color as the skin? Was the blood tainted? Would conversion to Christianity solve it all? If the colonizers' plural, often contradictory theories made simple answers difficult, the questions got even more complex as a result of the West's Others' adaptations and resistance.

This course provides an overview of the female body and women's health in Latin America and Spain from a cultural perspective, which addresses related social implications and health rights. Students will analyze women's health issues through critical interpretation of literary texts, poems, movies, documentaries, and photography using media perspectives and theoretical approaches. Students will be exposed to topics across four overarching themes: adolescence, reproduction, illness, and aging, with subtopics such as sexuality, sexual orientation, gender identities in relation to transgender and intersex issues, pregnancy, infertility, breast cancer, menopause, and eating disorders, among others. At the same time, students will be exposed to a broader geographical and historical panorama by examining the relationship between women's health issues to the political and cultural issues of different countries in the Hispanic world. Based on these particular contexts, communities, and identities, we will try to answer the question why these women's issues happened in those regions and within specific communities. Students will be expected to engage in critical discussions, and will be given the opportunity to connect and contrast these issues with their own cultural experience.

The post-Cold War era characterized by the ascendancy of postcolonialism and globalization has brought about a profound critique of U.S. based area studies and its Cold War legacy. As such, the very structure of knowledge-production that has provided the enabling framework for area studies has come under scrutiny. How is an area defined? Who defines that area? In other words, what or whom is the object of knowledge? Can this object of knowledge also transform into the subject of knowledge? Or is there a clear division of labor in the way the territoriality of knowledge is constituted? The study of Latin America has engaged with the challenges presented by this historical and political impasse. How has Latin Americanism engaged, participated and assisted in the construction and definition of its very object? What is at stake in claiming ¿Latin America¿ as a separate, unique and recognizable geopolitical, economic and cultural entity? The crisis in area studies has brought these questions to the fore, along with the development of cultural and ethnic studies, the expediency of consumer culture based on the commodification of difference, and the impact of unformulated political goals on global activism and social movements. In this course, we will first examine how the afterlives of area studies ¿ in particular Latin American cultural studies ¿ both deconstruct and reconstruct, question and preserve older models of knowledge-production by exploring the major debates in Latin American cultural studies, as well as the current discussions on area studies and the politics of knowledge (e.g. academic disciplines) formation. Second, we will also explore more recent epistemological frameworks that reevaluate and reimagine the ways in which we structure knowledge: Latinx Studies, Archipelagic American Studies, Transpacific Studies, Queer Studies, Critical Race Theory, Disability Studies, Crip Theory, and Posthuman Studies.
Pre Requisite(s): None
This course will be taught in parallel with HAA 2400, taught by Jennifer Josten. The two courses, which will sometimes meet together and sometimes separately, will bring graduate students from at least two departments together in an interdisciplinary analysis of key Latin American cultural and political magazines from the 1920s through the 1970s. The HLL course will focus on Latin American magazines and journals of the various avant garde movements from the 1920s to the 1970s, including such central cultural magazines as Amauta (Peru), the Revista Martín Fierro (Argentina), Revista de Antropofagia and Contemporáneos (Mexico) in the 1920s, Nadie parecía (Cuba), Sur, the Revista Multicolor de los Sábados and Cuadernos de FORJA in the (Argentina) in the 1930s, Orígenes (Cuba) and Los Anales de Buenos Aires, Papeles de Buenos Aires Latitud and the Revista Arturo (Argentina) in the 1940s, Marcha (Uruguay), the Revista Centro (Argentina) and Ciclón (Cuba), and such journals as Casa de las Américas (Cuba) and Los Libros (Argentina) in the 1960s. Writers associated with these magazines include Jorge Luis Borges, Oliverio Girondo, José Carlos Mariátegui, Oswald de Andrade, Salvador Novo, Victoria Ocampo, José Lezama Lima, José Bianco, Virgilio Piñera and Haroldo de Campos. Many artists were also associated with these magazines, and the relations between the visual and the literary were often central to the avant garde. Cultural magazines of the kinds mentioned are unique objects for study, since they show the relations among artists and writers, and their common efforts to design magazines that sought to reach a broad spectrum of readers and publics. Taught in Spanish and English, with some readings in Portuguese.

This seminar will address ongoing debates about literary works that invite epistemological changes in the production of Latin American critical thinking. Here the term "post-anthropocentric" draws attention to a reorientation of the entire spectrum of humanistic inquiry, as well as to pressing questions about the meaning of being ¿civilized human beings¿ in times of increasing obliteration of epistemological diversity. Topics to be covered include: spectrology, ecology of knowledge, new materialisms, ontological turn, cultures of the Anthropocene, and indigenous ontologies. We¿ll see to what extent Ancient American narratives (e.g. Popol Vuh, Mexican Codices, Coloquios y doctrina cristiana) as well as the work of Felipe Guaman Poma de Ayala, Gamaliel Churata, César Calvo, among others that will be discussed in the seminar, cannot be understood, either aesthetically or conceptually, without taking into consideration a context of post-anthropocentric reflection.

Pre Requisite(s): None

This graduate seminar will offer a theoretically informed overview of select Brazilian and Lusophone African (namely Angolan, Cape Verdean and Mozambican) fiction from the late-nineteenth century and into contemporaneity. The course will focus particularly on the ways in which authors have represented processes of social change and national identity formation. Through readings and discussions of the chosen literary works as well as critical theory, students will explore the fictive representations of these turbulent periods of social change and its intersections with issues of race, gender and modernity.

This course is designed to examine the history of organized crime not only within the United States, but from an international perspective as well. The emergence of "non-traditional" groups which are competing for power and profits will be examined, as well as the alliances between various criminal groups that have evolved, resulting in the phenomenon of "transnational" organized crime. Those "non-traditional" groups include, but are not necessarily limited to, domestic and international terrorist organizations, the reasons for their development as well as the perceived risk to American citizens both in a domestic environment and abroad. Neither organized crime nor a terrorist organization can be effectively discussed without integrating the evolution of US drug policy, which will be included. Finally, the various government tactics implemented to counter the threats mentioned herein as well as the impact on the private sector will be integrated into lectures throughout the program.

Organized crime is no longer confined to a few countries such as Italy, the United States, and Japan. During the 1980s and 1990s it has become much more pervasive, and has had a major impact in countries such as Russia and other countries in transition, Turkey, Mexico, and South Africa. This course looks at the dynamics of organized crime, explains why it develops in particular countries, the various forms it takes, and the responses of law enforcement agencies and international institutions. This is a CGS Web course with web based (BlackBoard) instruction and weekly online interaction is required. Students must have reliable internet access to take this course.

The immigration law clinic is a two semester clinic. Students may enroll in either the spring or the fall semesters. Students will receive a grade at the conclusion of each semester, however, in the event that a student does not complete the second semester the student shall receive a w for the course (for both semesters), thus nullifying the grade for the prior semester. Students will receive 3 credits per semester. In the immigration clinic students represent immigrants requesting asylum, facing removal from the United States, and seeking special protection under the violence against women act. In representing clients under the supervision of the clinical professor, students perform all aspects of case preparation including interviewing clients, writing pleadings, appearing in immigration court, appearing before administrative agencies and managing post-relief issues. Clinic students also assist their clients in overcoming linguistic and cultural barriers that could impede their clients' success in the U.S. Legal system. Clients may include refugees, immigrant women and children survivors of domestic violence applying to change their status, persons with criminal convictions who seek relief from removal from the United States and other immigrant populations. Students are also expected to collaborate with community based organizations that serve the foreign born population in the city.

How can we improve the ability of society to choose between alternative policies? This course provides a framework to assess alternative policies on the dimensions of efficiency, equity, and political feasibility. The comparative institutional framework requires an interdisciplinary perspective which draws on economics, political science, and political economy. Throughout the course, we will consider how insights from these disciplines provide insight into the choices confronting policymakers seeking to bring society closer to their conception of the good life. The course is organized into three parts: an introduction to policy analysis; a framework for comparative markets and governments; and applications of the framework. One of the main goals of the course, besides mastering the material (as evidenced by an in-class midterm), is a series of papers applying these concepts as well as an original research paper conducting a policy analysis. Note: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America, Caribbean and/or Latinx/Caribbean Diaspora. Work must be submitted to CLAS advisor after completion of the course.

<td>Human Security</td>

<td>This course introduces the core concepts of human security, examines the institutions that promote them, and probes the advantages and limitations of human security as a means of addressing difficult policy issues. Human security treats individuals and communities, rather than states and institutions, as the fundamental units of analysis. It calls for an integration of individuals' security and integrity with state security and sovereignty. Analyzing security at the level of individuals instead of states raises important challenges and opportunities for observers and practitioners of development, conflict and peace, human security, and investigate substantive policy agendas affecting human security on a range of global issues. We grapple with both direct and structural violence especially among vulnerable populations, and with debates about prioritizing or narrowing human security threats and referents. And we explore how a diverse set of actors develop global public policy responses by articulating new policy agendas and defining policy recommendations. Throughout the term we assess the advantages and drawbacks of the human security. NOTE: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America, Caribbean and/or Latinx/Caribbean Diaspora.</td>

<td>International History</td>
<td>This course examines how history can inform policymaking. It does this by looking at key watersheds in international history - watersheds that continue to shape the world in which we live. One immediate goal of the course is to acquaint you with these watersheds, to increase what one might call your historical literacy - your knowledge of these key points in time - and your understanding of how these times continue to affect us. But the course does not stop with understanding, but tackles the question of how to act on that understanding. Unlike graduate history courses that focus on the &quot;how&quot; of history (how to research and write history - how we learn what happened), this course focuses on the &quot;what&quot; of history...And specifically what we do in light of what has happened. The idea is not just that history teaches lessons or that history can repeat itself or that &quot;those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it,&quot; but that an appreciation of how events have unfolded in the past may make us better able to deal with the complexity of what is going on at present. NOTE: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America, Caribbean and/or Latinx/Caribbean Diaspora.</td>

Since the end of the cold war, threats to national and international security have become more varied and diffused. Some of these threats are subtle and insidious rather than overtly military in character. Transnational organized crime has this character. The course is intended to provide substantive knowledge about major transnational criminal organizations and the threats they pose to domestic and global governance and to international security and stability. Accordingly, it places the challenge posed by transnational organized crime in the context of broader issues of globalization, governance, and disorder. The purpose of this course is to examine the phenomenon of transnational organized crime, in all its variations and manifestations, to identify major transnational criminal organizations and activities, to assess the threat posed to national and international security and stability, and to evaluate the policy implications of this threat. Attention is given to the initiatives governments have taken in response to the transnational crime challenge, and an assessment made of the adequacy of these initiatives. Throughout the course students will be encouraged to become familiar with analytical techniques that are used by intelligence and law enforcement agencies in understanding, assessing, and responding to organized crime. NOTE: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America, Caribbean and/or Latinx/Caribbean Diaspora.

This is a survey of development policies, issues, institutions, and resources for professionals working in development. Lectures, discussions, and presentations in class focus on analysis of development policies, and on new and significant policy issues, skills, methodologies, and resources. The course helps students develop the ability to analyze development issues from several perspectives, understand the breadth of international development as a field of professional service and academic study, and clarify their priorities for acquiring skills in preparation for that service. Students completing the course will be able to grasp the history of approaches and experiences with development, identify and critically analyze major institutions involved, assess political and institutional environments of development, employ some key social science and administrative tools, and recognize and understand principles of other significant skills and emerging methodologies in development practice. The course is organized in three parts: 1) dynamics of development and social change; 2) development management: who's in charge; And 3) contemporary issues and skills. Throughout the course we will introduce, discuss, and return to case studies that illuminate key issues and themes: the global HIV/AIDS pandemic, microfinance programs in development, the chad-cameroon oil pipeline project, water system privatization, and the global and local food prices and production. NOTE: For credit in the CLAS certificate all work must be concentrated on Latin America and/or The Caribbean.

The 1992 Rio Declaration on environment and development states that ‘to achieve sustainable development, environmental protection shall constitute an integral part of the development process.’
We discuss the linkages between development and the environment, and the role of women, indigenous peoples, and the poor in achieving equitable development and environmental protection. Using tools from economics and policy analysis, we explore the conceptualization of environmental problems (market or government failure); various policy instruments to rectify environmental problems (regulations, voluntary programs, taxes, tradable permits, payments for environmental services and international treaties such as the Basel Convention, the Montreal Protocol, and the Kyoto Protocol), and the link between trade and the environment. Students’ case presentations illustrate the challenges of environmental management in developing countries and the roles of civil society, NGOs, corporations, and international institutions such as the world bank, world trade organization, and united nations environmental program. Over the course of the semester, students are responsible for several policy

The core course provides an overview of the social and behavioral sciences and their importance in the inter-disciplinary field of public health. A primary emphasis is on the social-ecological model, its application to public health issues, and its use in the development of policies, strategies, interventions and programs. The course content will introduce students to several relevant social and behavioral theories as well as a range of community health assessment and planning models used by public health professionals in both domestic and international venues. Through a series of assigned readings, discussion exercises, group projects, quizzes and written assignments, students will enhance their knowledge and awareness of the role of social and behavioral sciences in public health and its relevance to their specific discipline. At the conclusion of the course students will be able to: identify the important social and behavioral determinants of health; describe the inter-relationships between the social, behavioral, bio-medical, physiological, and environmental factors related to individual and community health; identify the major health disparities related to social, behavioral and economic factors; describe the role of culture and socio-economic status in health behavior, access to services, and decision-making; and understand the importance of community partnerships and participatory approaches in the development, implementation, management and evaluation of community policies and programs.
