In this presentation, Dr. Lovra will bring the urban fabric and urban heritage of Habsburg Central Europe (1867-1918) into closeup. The relevance of the topic is deeply embedded in our theoretical and practical knowledge, even though Western Europe’s traditions and urban planning principles are generally the focus of the academic study of urban design and planning. These Western traditions and principles, though fundamentally important to know and thoroughly understand, should not obscure the knowledge of our own close environment: the Central and East-Central European urban heritage, its structure, the towns and their characteristic urban fabrics, the urban fabric types and urban taxonomy in general.
