This seminar will explore the relationship between governance, institutionalized power, and human social life. We will consider explicit ways in which power over self and other is enacted. We will also ask how power is instituted tacitly in everyday routines and practices, in how we carry our bodies, move through space, and undertake our work. Finally, we will examine how diverse modes of power and governance include or exclude, enabling or prohibiting access to social and political communities; to speech and representation; and to rights and livable livelihood. The course will entail a significant engagement with key theoretical approaches, as well as close reading of both classic and more recent ethnographic studies that explore these questions from a diversity of geographical and historical perspectives. Specific topics explored may include the role of states, institutions, and bureaucracies; the rule of law; the built environment, landscapes, and objects; border regimes, policing, and regulatory practices; and the governance of care, ethics, and morality.

This is the second of a two-course sequence for students who prepare to study at the university level in the humanities or social sciences in a German-speaking country. The course is taught entirely in German and has three interconnected and equal objectives: 1) Strengthening students' German language skills by working on content specific to the social sciences by rehearsing important aspects of German grammar and developing German social science vocabulary. 2) Exploration of the historical development, the current institutional structure and the challenges the European Union as a supranational entity is facing. 3) Introduction to the conceptual framework and methodological approaches practiced by social scientists studying the EU. To this effect the course uses the perception of the EU in public discourse by taking a snap shot of the economic problems the EU has been facing; the 'Eurocrisis.' The 'Eurocrisis' has reinvigorated old national stereotypes which seem to contradict the EU's own rhetoric of unity through diversity. The 'Eurocrisis' thus serves as a good segue into the broader questions which this course aims to explore: Can a supranational entity like the EU whose integration was a slow institutional process offer a unifying identity for its citizens? With which policies does the EU try to generate identity within its citizenry? How has migration to the EU affected the constitution of a unifying identity? In order to answer these questions, it is important to carefully study both the historical development of the EU as well as the current institutional structure and its deficits. This course explores the state of the European union today with respect to the issue of collective identity formation by integrating the historical development of the EU with studying its evolving institutional structure. The course examines how culture which was originally only an afterthought of European integration has gained in importance since the overarching permissive consensus with which European populations passively supported the integration process began to crumble with the Maastricht treaty of 1992. Through a variety of sources from across the social sciences, political theory and social philosophy, the course elucidates how EU cultural policy aims to engender a transnational European identity. This course examines the history of nationalism, the making of ethnicity, and the nation-state. The course provides an overview of theoretical approaches, applicable both to historical and to more recent nationalist challenges in Europe. We will place particular emphasis on changing national and regional identities in Europe, comparing the development of nationalism in Western European countries such as France or Germany with Eastern European developments in the Russian and Habsburg Empires and its successor states. The course examines the wave of ethnic nationalism in Eastern Europe after the dissolution of Yugoslavia and the Soviet Union. Finally, we will explore new trends of populist nationalism and the rise of right-wing nationalist extremism in the wake of the refugee crisis and Brexit. "Pre-knowledge in European history is advantageous but not required. This class can be taken by students of all levels, including First-Year students."

30 years ago, the communist regime of the German Democratic Republic (DDR/GDR) crumbled. Despite a whole generation of Germans having grown up in a reunified country, the memory of forty years of dictatorship is still very vivid and its legacy haunts contemporary political, and socio-economic everyday life. At first, we will review the general history of the Cold War, focusing on the end of the Second World War and the policies of the Soviet Union. We will look at how the (former) Allies fought over Berlin and the formal political division of Germany. Second, we will focus on divided Germany and on how the two nations and their ruling elites dealt with the division. This "Wall" did not simply cut a country in two, it severed family ties, long-standing economic connections, and communication routes. Third, we will look at the various ways that the modern German nation deals with its communist past. For example, the Federal Commission for the Records of the State Security (Stasi-Unterlagenbehörde) administers the legacy of the hated East German secret police. While serving historians as a research institution, the Commission also functions as a government tool to impose a certain vision of the past - often resulting in controversy over memory cultures.
