

With increasing forms of precarity across the globe, there is a need to call attention to sites of struggle that bridge assumed divisions between "migrants," "refugees," and "citizens." These include access to housing, safety, thriving neighborhoods, healthcare, food, education, childcare, the labor market, and other shared needs. What would it mean to de-exceptionalize displacement, rethinking mobility and citizenship alike?

De-exceptionalizing Displacement?

Rethinking Citizenship and Mobility

How do the forms of displacement and dispossession experienced by people constrained in place intersect with the struggles of people displaced across borders?
